On 26 November 2020, the academic world and the study of names lost a reputable member, when Professor Nicolae Felecan passed away. He had a long and prolific career, in which teaching and scientific pursuits were masterly intertwined. The fruit of his activity make up the legacy that obliges everyone who knew him or his research to honour and carry on his work.

Professor Nicolae Felecan was born in northern Transylvania in the late summer of 1941. He graduated Classical Languages at the University of Bucharest in 1964, and obtained the doctoral degree twelve years later, at the Institute of Linguistics and Literary History of the Romanian Academy (Cluj-Napoca branch), with a thesis on Sistemul lexico-semantic al termenilor ce denumesc părţile corpului uman în limba română [The lexical-semantic system of terms designating parts of the human body in Romanian]. The topics touched upon in this seminal contribution were developed by Professor Felecan not only in the academic courses he taught in Romania and during the one-year lectureship in Romanian Language at Aarhus University, Denmark, but also in a part of his scholarly endeavours.

The philological educational milieu in Baia Mare is highly indebted to Professor Felecan. His professional activity is synonymous with the existence of the University of Baia Mare, where he educated the young and mentored proficient teachers and researchers. The Faculty of Letters itself owes its birth and growth to the efforts undertaken by Professor Felecan, who as its Dean successfully applied himself to establish new bachelor programmes, alongside master's and doctoral programmes in the humanities. He was always appreciated as a role model of competence, rigour, and professional probity, as much as he was treasured for his ability to instil in his students the highest working standards and the passion for the study of language under all its facets.

Nicolae Felecan's didactic, academic occupation was interwoven with his scientific pursuits. Thus, he is well-known nationally and internationally for his work in the fields of the Romanian language (lexicology, syntax), Latin language, onomastics, dialectology, and Romance philology. He was a member of several scientific associations, such as the Romanian Society of Philological Sciences, the Society of Classical Studies, Société de linguistique romane ('Society of Romance linguistics'), the Romanian Society of Dialectology, and the International Council of Onomastic Sciences. Moreover, Professor Nicolae Felecan was awarded many prizes and honours in Romania and abroad, which confirmed the scholarly and cultural excellence of his academic and research activities. He participated in numerous national and international scientific events. He published six academic courses on Latin language aspects and Romanian lexicology and syntax, eighteen books (as author and co-author), a translation from Latin into Romanian, hundreds of studies in specialised journals, collective volumes, festschrifts, and proceedings in various countries throughout the world. Of the countless, diverse contributions to scholarship, one can mention the following (related especially to onomastics):

Professor Nicolae Felecan's academic recognition is quantified not only by the hundreds of citations of his works, but also by two festschrifts edited on the occasion of his 70th and 75th birthdays, respectively:

- Felecan, Oliviu & Felecan, Daiana (eds.). 2011. Confluenţe lingvistice şi filologice [Linguistic and philological confluences]. Cluj-Napoca: Editura Mega;

On 24 August 2021, Professor Nicolae Felecan would have turned 80 years old. It is difficult, if not impossible to talk about him in the past tense. His energy, commitment, and integrity will never cease to be paragons of personal and professional development. Similarly, his academic and scientific achievements will forever inspire scholars and stand as landmarks that they should aspire to reach.
