

SYMBOLIC MEANINGS OF PHRASEOLOGICAL UNITS WITH THE COMPONENT SHEEP IN THE EUROPEAN LANGUAGES

ANA KOACHEVA

The term phrasal unit, which is used herein, encompasses both phrasemes in the strict sense of the word, as well as stable comparisons, i.e. any stable multi-word expression with constant syntactic structure and overall meaning differing in variable degrees from the sum of the meaning of the individual components (for details see German-Bulgarian Phrasal Dictionary 2012:5).

This broader understanding of phraseological units is imposed by the material which in different languages is diverse and not always easily comparable. In some languages a certain phraseological unit is registered only as a phrasal combination (in the narrow sense of the word a phraseme), in others – the same phraseological unit is an element of sustainable comparison, in the third – an epigram, etc., compare Bulg., shugava ovtsa or vürtya se kato shugava ovtsa with Russian vygonyat' parshivuyu ovtsu (iz stada), with English a scabbed sheep will mar a whole flock, and so on.

The figurative meaning of a phraseological unit reveals its immanent nature. It is connected not only with the particular way of life of every nation, but in most cases it has expressive, emotional character which exposes a specific attitude (positive or negative) to the various elements of life. When the figurative meaning is based on naive views and explanations about the nature of things, it is specified as symbolic.

Here, I will discuss the symbolic meanings of close semantic phrasal units built on expressions with the component sheep with its attributes: black// marked// lost// stray// slaughtered// mangy// scabby, etc. – all reflecting a common negative feature – the separation of a sheep from the herd and its isolation. The figurative (symbolic) meaning – mythological or religious – to a large extent is common to European nations that have similar mythology and Christian religion. This allows comparison between languages in Europe, which relate mainly to the Slavic, Romance and Germanic group, but also languages of another type.

This material was excerpted from 40 sources in Cyrillic and Latin (see the end) for Bulgarian, Serbian, Croatian, Slovenian, Russian, Ukrainian, Belorussian,

FD, XXXVI, Bucureşti, 2017, p. 47–53

Lusatian, Lithuanian, Latvian, French, Spanish, Italian, Romanian, German, English, Greek, Albanian, etc.

These are mostly monolingual, bilingual and phraseological dictionaries in the relevant languages, as well as several special studies on set phrases, stable comparisons, sayings, proverbs and epigrams, containing a collocation of sheep with the above mentioned attributes. Here are some typical examples:

I. Black sheep. This is a phraseme with figurative mythological meaning arising from the negative symbolism of the black colour (common to the European continent, unlike some countries in Asia and Africa, where the negative symbolism is associated with the white colour).

In various locations in Bulgaria, there are even prophylactic holidays associated with the name of the black colour: (Баба Черна, Черни вериги, Църен ден, Черняй, Черен празник) Black Granny, Black chains, Black day, Chernyay, Black Holiday (a day or two days after the Day of St. Athanasius), when a black hen is slaughtered as a sacrifice to propitiate black diseases bringing death (for details see Bulgarian mythology. Encyclopedic Dictionary 1994: 313).

The “Mora” (from the root mor “death”) is considered the female hypostasis (analog) of the male black god of the pantheon of the southern Slavs (Bulgarian mythology. Encyclopedic Dictionary 1994: 219). The soul of the sinner is black as sheep’s wool; therefore people make a sacrifice with white sheep for appeasement of St. Michael the Tormentor. In heaven, St. Elias has white sheep (“clouds without rain”) and black sheep (“hail clouds”). Thus, pagan beliefs overlap with Christian ones.

In Poland, the drowning man becomes a black ram. In Russia, they talk about the suicide as “odranyy baran chertu gotov” and also “Chertu baran davno obodran” (translated: ‘Skinned ram is ready for the devil’ and ‘For the devil, the ram has long been skinned’).

The mythological meaning associated with the black sheep exists in Western Europe too. According to Irish legends, (FSSI 2003: 79) priest Damghar’s guards consisted of vicious and diabolical creepy black sheep. Three black sheep with iron spikes (thorns) are protagonists in the struggles between the Irish King Cormac and common people from suburban neighborhoods who refused to pay the imposed taxes.

In Bulgarian, according to Phrasal Dictionary of the Bulgarian Language (II) 1975: 504, the phraseme black sheep has two meanings: 1. A person, who has provoked general disapproval and therefore all his actions make an impression. Example: At home I’m the black sheep and 2. A person with bad behaviour who is different from his relatives or the people from his circle. Example: In our family we have never had a black sheep and will not have one. Synonymous to this phraseme with the same two meanings is the phrase marked sheep.

Equivalents of the phrasal unit in other European languages: Serbian and Croatian: Tsrla ovtsa u poròditsu ‘The black sheep of the family’; Slovenian: Črna ovca (together with Garjava ovca); črñ kot ovca contrary to siv kot ovca ‘white as a sheep'. (Similar is the situation in Ukrainian); Czech: Byt černou ovci rodiny; Slovak: Čierna ovca 'an unlucky person, kicked out from the group'; Spanish: oveja negra; Italian: La pecora nera in the example Io sono la pecora nera 'I am a scoundrel'; German: Das schwarze Schaff (in der Familie) sein 1. 'I am the worst in the family', 2. 'Outsider, I am a failure'; English: There is a black sheep in every flock (literally, There is a black sheep in every herd); Greek: αντός είναι το μαύρο πρόβατο 'He is the black sheep'; Albanian: Delja e zezë s' bëhet kurrë e bardhë (literally, A black sheep can never become white) 'A bad person can never become good'.

II. The two phrasal units I am wandering (roaming) as a sheep and Wandering (lost) sheep have biblical origin. The shepherd (God) is taking care of his herd of sheep (lay brothers), but a sheep is going astray from Christian norms (it is deluded, lost).

a) Semantics of the sustainable comparison 'rove, go like a sheep aimlessly, along the wrong way'. According to Vatov 2002: 272 "the biblical texts use close prototypes with the same meaning": All of us were wandering like sheep, we turned aside from our way, and the Lord laid on him the sins of us all (тако овца заевладиХомъ)... "they are wandering like sheep, suffering, because they have no shepherd (изъгаша са тако овца)".

б) The semantics of the second phraseme according to Vatov 2002: 272 is connected "with one of the Gospel parables of Jesus ... If someone has a hundred sheep and one of them goes astray, will he not have 99 and will he not go to the mountains in search of the lost one" (Codex Marianus и заевладиХитъ едина отъ нижъ... и шедъ иштеиъ заевладиХашаи... It reveals God's care for the sinner and Christ's joy of his transformation. Accurate prototypes of the expression are used elsewhere in the New Testament texts: ... "be pleased with me, because I found the lost sheep". Vatov goes even further in time, discovering the prototype even in the Old Testament: "I got deluded like a lost sheep". In the Phrasal Dictionary of the Bulgarian Language (I) the phraseme deluded sheep is interpreted as 'a person who does not behave properly, a profligate person'.

Equivalents of phrasal units in other European languages: Serbian and Croatian: Zalutala//Izgubena//Zabludela ovtsa 'a person who has turned away from his environment, society, family; someone who is going on the wrong way of life'; Slovenian: izgubleña ovca//zabludela ovca 'a person without a goal, without meaning in life'; Russian: zabludshaya ovtşa; zablýdna ovtşa; Ukr. zablukana vivtsya, zabludela vivtsya; Czech: zbloudená//bludná//ztracená ovce; Slovak: zatul'ana ovca, stratená ovca; Polish: zbląkana ovca; Lithuanian paklydusi avicė; French brebis égarée; German: verirrtes, verlorenes Schaff (literary); English: lost sheep, see example to lose the sheep for a ha' porth of tar (saving one lost sheep you lose the whole herd); Albanian: Delen e vetme (gë ndahet nga tufa e ha ujki)

(The lost, wandering sheep is eaten by the wolf) ‘Those who are going away from friends will suffer’; Greek: ἀπολωλός πρόβατο ‘deluded sheep’.

III. A sheep sent to the slaughter// slaughtered sheep. According to Vatov 2002: 273 “the expression with meaning ‘without resistance, humble, silent’ has been used too frequently in biblical texts ... which has facilitated its transition into the literary language, e.g. “... Because of You they kill us every day, they think we are sheep doomed to be slaughtered” (Old Bulg. т. 3 тако овца на заколене “...like a sheep, he was taken to be slaughtered”). In the Bulgarian folk speeches, regardless of the prerequisite for existence, the expression is found very rarely. More often the idea of slaughter is expressed in another way: I look like a slaughtered sheep ‘I look indifferently’.

IV. A sick sheep (mangy ‘scabby’, rotten, staggered, etc.) Exact equivalents in biblical texts have not been registered. Combinations reflect household peculiarities associated with sheep breeding and hence figurative uses regarding the appearance or character of some people compared to sick sheep. Later, they were connected with church life (Serbian). They are found in all European languages: Bulgarian: Kato shugava ovtsa ot stado (se delya) ‘Stay aside from others’; Kato shugava ovtsa (se v"rtya) ‘Turn around restlessly, nervously’; Kato v"rtoglava ovtsa (hodya) ‘Waste my time’; Kato metilyava ovtsa (se v"rtya) ‘Toss and turn’; Serbian: Shugava ovtsa ‘A big sinner’; Gybava ovtsa (leprosous sheep) ‘A big sinner’ – Ti si shugava, gubava ovtsa u stadu svete matere tsrkve; Slovenian: Garjava ovca (scabby sheep) ‘Restless person, staying aside from others’, Russian: Parshivaya ovtsa ‘Scabby shepp’ – Parshivaya ovtsa vsë stado portit; Belorussian – Parshyvaya avèchka usyu charadì psuè; Czech: Prašlivá ovce; Slovak: Prašivá ovca ‘Scabby sheep’ – V každom stáde sa prašivá ovca najde (There is carrion in every herd) ‘In every family (group), there is a freak’; Lithuanian: Vienà nususéle avis visà banda vížkrečia ‘In every family (group), there is a freak’; Latvian: Viena kraupjaina aita visu ganampulku maitā ‘In every family (group), there is a freak’; French: Brebis galeuse (mangy sheep) ‘Unwanted person in a group’; Spanish: Oveja sarnosa ‘mangy sheep’; German: Ein raudiges Schaf steckt die ganze Herde an (A mangy sheep will make the whole herd scabby); English A scabbed sheep will mar a whole flock. Possibly, in English there is a literary combination – as a sheep among the shearers. Bulgarian Gledam kato zaklana ovtsa ‘Look dumb, stupid’ and Turkish Koyun can derdinde, kasap yağ derdinde (literally – The sheep is concerned about its life, the butcher – about the suet) ‘Every person is taking care of himself’ have only folk character and are not related to religious attitude.

V. Like sheep (lambs) among wolves. According to Vatov 2002: 273, “the expression has a figurative meaning ‘unprotected, helpless’. Its prototype was used in the Gospel texts (Luke 10:3), e.g. St. Matthew 10:16 : „Behold, I send you as sheep among wolves... (Codex Marianus: ιακό οεψα ποερβάδε βλύκτη)". This completely corresponds to the English a sheep among wolves and the Russian ovechka sredi volkov.

The relation sheep – wolves has a very wide spectrum of various phrasemes and cannot always be assigned directly to the biblical texts. It is of everyday nature. However, it is always symbolically related to the associations defenseless – bloodthirsty.

In Bulgarian: V"lk ovtse pase 'A person saying the impossible'; Zhenya ovttsata za v"lka 'Trying to do something impossible'; Kato v"lka za ovtsete (s"m se zagrizhil) 'I am not taking care of anyone'; (Mil mi ye) kato na ovtsete v"lka 'I don't care about him'; Kato ovttsa na v"lk (drag) 'I don't like him'; Pusnali v"ltsite da pasat ovtsete 'Inappropriate entrusting the responsibility to an inappropriate person'; Ovttsa, koyato se deli ot stadoto si, v"ltsite ya izyazhdat; Serbian and Croatian: Ko se ovtsom uchini kurjatsi ga pojedu (Those who pretend to be sheep will be eaten by wolves) 'Someone who is too humble (reconciling) is treated badly'; Poveriti ovtse vuku (Entrust the sheep to the wolf) 'To entrust something to someone who will destroy it'; Russian: V ovechey shkure (A wolf in a sheep's skin) 'a covert enemy'; Ukrainian: Khto stayet'sya vvitseyu, togo vovk zzist' (literally – Those who become sheep are eaten by wolves) 'The weak one loses'; Latvian: vilks paēdis un kaza dziva (vesela) (lit. The wolves are full, the sheep are safe); Romanian: Lup în piele de oaie (A wolf in a sheep's skin) 'a covert enemy', Nici lupul săul, nici oaia cu doi miei (The wolves are full, the sheep are safe) 'An agreement – both parties are satisfied'; French: Il ne faut pas donner de brebis à garder du lup (The wolf should not protect the sheep); German: Schafe ohne Schäfer sind des Wolfes Geschenk (sheep without a shepherd are a gift to the wolf), English Wolf in sheep's clothing, Albanian: Nuk fle delja me rykun bashkë (The sheep does not sleep with the wolf) 'There is no understanding between an honest and a dishonest person'; Greek: λύκος με προβία απνον (A wolf in a sheep's skin); ο λύκος έγινε αρνάκι (The wolf turned into a lamb) 'A hypocrite'.

In conclusion, I should point out that it is typical of attributive phrasal units with permanent component sheep (cherna ovttsa, belyazana ovttsa, zabludena ovttsa, izgubena ovttsa, vürtoglava ovttsa, shugava//krastava ovttsa//pürshiva ovttsa, prokazhena ovttsa, metilyava ovttsa, etc.), regardless of the fact whether they are used primarily in folk, mythological or religious (mainly Christian) context, to mutually replace each other without changing the essential meaning of the phraseme. They all become close variants of a generic sememe 'a sheep which for one reason or another is distinguished from the herd'. After a semantic transfer, the sememe is already associated with the concepts man and society, and generally means 'a person who is repudiated by society'. This new symbolic meaning unites the above mentioned phrasal units and creates conditions for their synonymous use in all European languages.

SOURCES OF PHRASEOLOGICAL MATERIAL

АТБР 2009: Академичен турско-български речник (под редакцията на Ив. Добрев). С.

БАРС (I и II) 1977: Большой англо-русский словарь в двух томах (под руководством И. Р. Гальперина). М.

БГР 2003: Българско-гръцки речник (авт. Генчо Банев и Нели Карагъозова). С.

БЕР (4) 1995: Български етимологичен речник (колектив). БАН. С.

БМЕР 1994: Българска митология. Енциклопедичен речник. С.

БНФР 1997: Българско-немски фразеологичен речник (авт. Жана Гъльбова и Константин Гъльбов). С.

БРФР 1974: Българско-руски фразеологичен речник (авт. А. Кошелев и М. Леонидова). С.

БСР 2000: Бугарско-сръшки речник (авт. Марин Младенов). Београд

БФР 1964: Българско-френски речник (авт. Л. Стефанова, А. Радев, Г. Дорчев, Н. Колев). С.

Вътов 2000: Вътвов, Върбан. Библията в езика ни. Речник на фразеологизмите с библейски произход. Велико Търново.

ЕПРБКЕ 1941: Етимологически и правописен речник на българския книжовен език (авт. проф. д-р Ст. Младенов). С.

ЕР 2007: Европейски речник. Български-английски-немски-френски-италиански-испански (автори Анри и Моник Гурсо). Любляна-Загреб-Белград-Сараево-Скопие-София-Букурещ.

ИБФР 2004: Италиано-български фразеологичен речник (авт. Ив. Тонкин). С.

КГБФР 1994: Кратък гръцко-български фразеологичен речник (авт. Фани Ангелиева и Славка Петрова). С.

Кювлиева 1986: Кювлиева, В. Устойчивите сравнения в българския език. БАН. С.

НФРБЕ 1993: Нов фразеологичен речник на българския език (авт. Кети Анкова-Ничева). С.

НБФР 2012: Немско-български фразеологичен речник (авт. Здравка Александрова). С.

ПБР 1961: Полско-български речник (под редакцията на Ив. Леков и Фр. Славски). С.

РБЕ (11) 2002: Речник на българския език (колектив). БАН. С.

РБЕ (12) 2004: Речник на българския език (колектив). БАН. С.

РЛС (I) 1959: Русско-латышский словарь. Т. I. Рига.

РСХКJ (III) 1969: Речник српскохрватскога књижевнога језика. Књига трећа (К-О). Нови Сад – Загреб.

СБР 1970: Словашко-български речник (под редакцията на Ив. Леков и В. Бланар). С.

СРЯ 1953: Словарь русского языка (авт. С.И.Ожегов). Москва.

СУМ (1) 1996: Словарь української мови в чотирьох томах. Том 1 (А–Ж). (Упорядкував з додатком власного матеріалу Борис Грінченко). Київ.

СУСРЯ 2001: Словарь устойчивых сравнений русского языка (автор В.М. Огольцов). Москва.

ТБР 1962: Турско-български речник (под ръководството на Ст. Романски). С.

ТСБЛМ 1996: Тлумачальны слоўнік беларускай мовы. Минск.

ФРБЕ (I) 1974: Фразеологичен речник на българския език, т. I (А–Н) (Автори: К. Ничева, С. Спасова-Михайлова, Кр. Чолакова). БАН. София.

ФРБЕ (II) 1975: Фразеологичен речник на българския език, т. II (О–Я) (Автори: К. Ничева, С. Спасова-Михайлова, Кр. Чолакова). БАН. София.

ФФБР 2003: Фразеологичен френско-български речник (авт. Божил Николов, Анна Бойчева, Хачик Хачикян). С.

*

Bachmanová, Suksov 2007: Jarmila Bachmanová a Valentin Suksov. Jak se to řekne jinde. Universum. Praha.

Keber 2003: Keber, Janez. Frazeološki slovar slovenskega jezika. Poskusni zvezek. Ljubljana.

RLKŽ (II) 1963: Rusu-lietuvių kalbų žodynas//Русско-литовский словарь в четырёх томах. IIт. (K–O) (от X. Лемхенас). Вильнюс.

SSF 2011: Slovar slovenskikh frazemov. (Janez Keber) Ljubljana.

SSJ (II) 1960: Slovník slovenského jazyka (vedecký redaktor stefan Peciar) II diel. SAV. Bratislava.

SSJČ (III) 1989: Slovník spisovného jazyka českého III (M–O). Akademia. Praha.

SJČ 1952: Slovník jazyka českého (František Trávníček). Praha.

VSRS (2) 1982: Veľký slovensko ruský slovník. Bratislava.

SYMBOLIC MEANINGS OF PHRASEOLOGICAL UNITS WITH THE COMPONENT SHEEP IN EUROPEAN LANGUAGES

ABSTRACT

The symbolic meanings of close semantic phrasal units built on expressions with the component sheep with its attributes: black// marked// lost// stray// slaughtered// mangy// scabby, etc. – all reflecting a common negative feature – the separation of a sheep from the herd and its isolation. These are mostly monolingual, bilingual and phraseological dictionaries in the relevant languages, as well as several special studies on set phrases, stable comparisons, sayings, proverbs and epigrams, containing a collocation of sheep with the above mentioned attributes. They all become close variants of a generic sememe ‘a sheep which for one reason or another is distinguished from the herd’. After a semantic transfer, the sememe is already associated with the concepts man and society, and generally means ‘a person who is repudiated by society’. This new symbolic meaning unites the above mentioned phrasal units and creates conditions for their synonymous use in all European languages.

Institute for Bulgarian Language of the Bulgarian Academy of Sciences, Sofia