

A CONTRASTIVE ANALYSIS OF PHRASEOLOGISMS WITH THE ZOONYM CAT IN BULGARIAN, GREEK, RUSSIAN AND SERBIAN¹

Panagiotis ASIMOPOULOS
Hellenic Army Academy

Abstract

The eternal contact of the human species with characteristic representatives of the animal kingdom undeniably indicates their constructive contribution to every psycho-intellectual parameter and cultural manifestation. In parallel the essential statement that human characteristics are reflected in animals and that quite reasonably, on the one hand, a fierce instructive character and also a catalytic productive symbolism are attributed to them, explains the dominant presence of many stereotypical phrases and inspired idioms in each language code.

Excerpting material from reliable lexicographic sources (general, phraseological, monolingual, bilingual dictionaries) with a view to the contrastive aspect of the paper, at first we attempt to clarify the semantic dimensions of the selected idioms in daily Greek and three modern Slavic languages, namely in Bulgarian, Russian and Serbian. Furthermore we tend to a conceptual analysis, but also to a highlighting of their principal similarities and main differences.

Key words: cat, semantics, phrasemes, idiomatic phrases, contrastive analysis

Résumé

L'éternel contact de l'espèce humaine avec les représentants caractéristiques du règne animal indique incontestablement leur contribution constructive à chaque paramètre psycho-intellectuel et à chaque manifestation culturelle. Parallèlement, l'affirmation essentielle selon laquelle les caractéristiques humaines sont réfléchies dans les animaux et que, de manière raisonnable, d'une part, un caractère féroce et aussi un symbolisme productif catalytique leur sont attribués, fait qui explique la présence dominante de plusieurs expressions stéréotypes et des idiomes inspirés dans chaque code linguistique.

Ce matériau, extrait de sources lexicographiques fiables (dictionnaires généraux, phraseologiques, monolingues, bilingues), afin de réaliser l'aspect contrastif du travail, représente un essai de clarification des dimensions sémantiques des idiomes sélectionnés du grec courant et trois langues slaves modernes, à savoir le bulgare, le russe et le serbe. De plus, on a l'intention de réaliser une analyse conceptuelle, mais aussi de souligner leurs principales ressemblances et différences.

Mots-clés: chat, phrasèmes, sémantique, expressions idiomatiques, analyse contrastive

¹ On this occasion, I would like to express my sincere gratitude and deep appreciation to the hieromonk Angelarij Andrić and dear colleagues dr. 1. Identification basis of phraseologisms

In modern researches Phraseology carries a two-dimensional concept: it indicates a wide linguistic spectrum which refers to the language idiomatic phrases and their set as well².

However, the generally accepted identification of idiomatic phrases³ or stereotypical expressions used in any language code reflects the essential difficulties related to:

(i) ambiguity: the multi-word expressions represent a double meaning based on the literal result that is derived from traditional syntactic-semantic analysis, but also on a metaphoric⁴ approach to them;

(ii) idiomaticity: the whole term doesn't comply with specific syntactic data, semantic features or pragmatological aspects of structural components;

(iii) contextual framework: it is possible that the phrasemes function as autonomous word combinations;

(iv) multilexicality: although the set phrases are not intra-sentential parts, they consist of two or more words whose mutual connection is narrow or relaxed. So they are characterized as "idiosyncratic interpretations that cross word boundaries (or spaces)"⁵;

(v) syntactic-semantic fixedness: their connection is accessible to the intellectual range of speakers⁶.

It is worth mentioning that the character of the idiomatic phrases is obvious, not only on the basis of their kind, but also through the relationship between form and meaning. Still as indicators of proper recognition of idioms act:

(a) the grammatical restrictions of which the most significant occur in:

(a₁) number, as a phraseologism may be formed either in the singular or plural:

- Greek: "τρώω πόρτα" {tróo pórtas} ~ "to eat a door" = not to be permitted to enter

- * not "τρώω πόρτες" {tróo pórtēs} ~ "to eat doors"

- Serbian: "добити корпу" ~ "to get a basket" = to be rejected by a girl

- * not "добити корпе" ~ "to get baskets"

(a₂) gender⁷:

² Шуба (1998, p. 322) claims that Phraseology is a "раздел языкознания, изучающий устойчивые сочетания в языке. Фразеологией называется также совокупность устойчивых сочетаний в языке отдельного художественного произведения и т.д."

³ "The term 'phraseologism' is used in two ways: (1) as a synonym for a phraseological unit, that is, as a general name for a unit of the phraseological system regardless of its structural-semantic and functional peculiarities and (2) as a name suitable only for the expressive phraseological units and mainly in the works of those linguists who in the phraseological units include besides the expressive and the non-expressive fixed syntagmas with nomination function in language" (Мршевић-Радовић, 1987, p. 11). Similar conceptual approaches are presented by Савко (2005, p. 87): "Фразеологизм – это устойчивые сочетания слов, постоянные по своему составу, значению и воспроизводимые в речи в качестве готовых и целостных единиц, напр., посыпать голову пеплом" and Шанский (1996, p. 22): "Фразеологический оборот – это воспроизводимая в готовом виде единица языка из двух или более ударных компонентов словного характера, фиксированная (т. е. постоянная) по своему значению, составу и структуре."

⁴ Lakoff, Johnson (1980, p. 153) underline: "Metaphor is primarily a thought and action and only derivatively a matter of language."

⁶ Fillmore, Kay, O'Connor, 1988, p. 504.

- Serbian: “дужан као Грк” ~ “to owe like a Greek man” = I have big debts

* not “дужан као Гркиња” ~ “to owe like a Greek woman”

(a₃) tense:

- Serbian: “неће (пасти / ударити) гром у коприве” [only in the future tense!]

~ “a thunder will not fall / hit in nettles”

= a worthless person doesn’t experience anything bad

* not “не (пада / удара) гром у коприве” ~ “a thunder does not fall / hit in nettles”

(a₄) modality:

- Serbian: “држ не дај” ~ “hold, do not give” = back and forth

* not “држ дај” ~ “hold, give”.

(b) an one-word periphrasis (either on the paradigmatic or on the syntagmatic axes only one word can paraphrase the phraseologism):

- Serbian: “ухватити се на лепак” ~ “to catch up on glue” = to be deceived

* not “ухватити се на млеко” ~ “to catch up on milk”.

(c) the conventionality⁸ (the functional use and the proper concept of phraseological units are not predictable in case of separation of their constituent entities):

- Serbian: “као светог Петра кајгана”

~ “as scrambled eggs of Saint Peter” = very expensive; at a high price

* not “као ~~светог Петра~~ кајгана” ~ “as scrambled eggs ~~of Saint Peter~~”.

(d) the lexical peculiarities (obsolete words or idiomatic phrases as autonomous lexemes present an exceptional frequency and a unique distribution):

- Serbian: “ни бригеша” [“бригеша” instead of “брига”]

~ “not worry” = a quite indifferent person

- Serbian: “обрни-окрени” ~ “reverse-turn” = take it as you wish.

(e) the lexico-grammatical fixedness (non-violation of criteria provides for it):

(e₁) substitutability:

- Serbian: “мачка има девет живота”

~ “a cat has nine lives” = a cat is able to survive despite a near encounter with death

* not “мачка има шест живота” ~ “a cat has six lives”

(e₂) deletion:

- Serbian: “уморан ко пас” ~ “as tired as a dog” = to be exhausted, to be worn out

⁷ Soler, 2004, p. 555.

⁸ According to Nayak, Gibbs (1990, p. 317) the choice of an idiomatic phrase is not in relation to arbitrary usage conventions.

* not “уморан ко нае” ~ “tired as a ~~dog~~”

(e₃) change of the lexical category:

- Serbian: “изводи бесне глисте”

~ “he takes out the angry worms”

= he does something stupid or crazy; he plays silly buggers; he plays the giddy goat

* not “изводи беснило глисте” ~ “he takes out the anger of the worms”

(e₄) permutation:

- Serbian: “Је л’ игра бела мечка?” ~ “Does the white bear dance?” = a bad event

* not “Је л’ игра мечка бела?” ~ “Does the bear the white dance?”.

(f) translatability (the idiomatic phrases are considered original structures of any language. So their word by word translation is not realizable):

- Greek: “τρέχα γύρευε” {tréxa jíreve} ~ “run look for”

= to declare indifference to something that is difficult to find or to accomplish

- Russian: “по уши влюбиться” ~ “on ears to fall in love” = to fall in love deeply

(g) semantic non-compositionality (the basic meaning of the multi-word expressions does not depend on the sense of their parts)⁹:

- Greek: “δένω το γάϊδαρό μου” {ḡéno tó γáĩḡaró mu}

~ “I tie my donkey” = to be secured mainly in a professional (financial, social) sense.

(h) semantic opacity: the historical and mythological background, the ecclesiastical and literary tradition¹⁰ explain the unclear word order of the set phrases:

- Serbian: “лупа ко Максим по дивизији”

~ “he bangs as Maxim over the division”

= he says something absurd (this idiomatic phrase is associated with a famous machine gun invented by Hiram Stevens Maxim in 1884).

(i) syntactic irregularity (the grammar and syntax rules are not fully applied):

- Serbian: “није ни принети” ~ “not either to bring” = to be incomparable.

(j) structure: in idiomatic phrases there are at least two lexical units one of which is called autosemantic and has an independent meaning outside of a particular context (noun, adjective, verb, adverb, number), while the syssemantic elements are of secondary importance (pronoun, preposition, conjunction, particle):

- Russian: “для вида” ~ “for the look” = as a blind (person)

- Russian: “по блату” ~ “on mud” = through good connections.

2. Origin and distinction of idiomatic phrases

In all national languages the phraseological units with a zoonym component play an interestingly impressive role. This general conclusion is verified by two unquestionable facts:

- (a) since ancient times the dominant presence of animals has been observed in everyday manifestations and various activities;
- (b) representatives of the animal kingdom are presented with symbolic, mostly negative concepts of human characteristics.

In the opinion of renowned anthropologists established stereotypes reflect derogatory connotations, while the majority of wrong anthropocentric prejudices are hierarchically formed under the catalytic influence of traditions, space, even fabulists (Aesop). In addition, human actions during long-term coexistence, as well as the prevailing tendency to portray human society better than the animal world, serve as the starting point for misinterpreting the authentic behavior of animals. About that Bertoša emphasizes: “the animal stereotypes arise from abuse of language and animal categories that are judged according to their direct utility or uselessness to man.”¹¹

Paralleling the double metaphorization of human features in animals with the movement of the boomerang Vidović-Bolt divides the zoonym idioms into¹²:

- (i) the concrete idiomatic phrases that come from the common life between people and animals, while they are real and recognizable:

- Serbian: “прести као мачка”

~ “to purr like a cat” = a person who tends to a comfortable life

- (ii) the associative multi-word expressions whose formation is related to the specific circumstances that the idiomatic phrase itself describes:

- Russian: “биться как рыба об лёд” ~ “to beat against the ice like a fish”

= to work very hard to survive, to struggle desperately

- (iii) the abstract phrasemes that are not explained in a logical way, because they are imposed by human interpretation:

- Russian: “покупать кота в мешке” ~ “to buy a cat in a sack”

= to get hold of something without having the opportunity to evaluate its qualities

- (iv) the Biblical set phrases¹³ that have been excerpted from the Bible:

- Serbian: “бити здрав као бик” ~ “to be as healthy as a bull” = to be extremely healthy

- (v) the national phraseologisms concerning only a certain nation:

- Serbian: “бити тврдоглав као босански магарац”

~ “to be as stubborn as a Bosnian donkey” = to be very stubborn

3. Topic – Corpus – Method

In every time period and social structure the cat (along with the dog) appears as the most favorite and adorable pet. Therefore, in the phraseological fund of the co-examined languages (Bulgarian, Greek, Russian, Serbian) we may find out a remarkable frequency and a particular diversity of the indicated set phrases which actually present the main subject of this contrastive research.

Using descriptive and phraseological, monolingual and bilingual dictionaries, we have primarily made a selection of characteristic phrases in order to show their most interesting similarities and major differences on the semantic level. According to the aforementioned data, such a linguistic paper cannot be perceived as a complete quadrilingual review of multi-word expressions.

The method of the contrastive analysis is primarily aimed at a detailed access to the rich corpus material which contains a total of two hundred fifty eight (258) lexical units: forty one (41) Bulgarian idioms, sixty eight (68) Greek set phrases, a hundred (100) Russian phraseologisms and forty nine (49) Serbian idiomatic phrases.

4. Main explanatory elements of the conducted contrastive analysis

For a more synoptic consideration we have distinguished all the phrasemes on the basis of their positive connotation or negative conceptual nuance, while accompanying them with necessary clarifying symbols: B = Bulgarian; G = Greek; R = Russian; S = Serbian; M = Meaning; ~ = literal translation; {} = Greek words accentuated and transcribed in line with the International Phonetic Alphabet:

4.1. Idiomatic phrases with positive connotations

4.1.1.

B: гъвкав като котка ~ as flexible as a cat

G₁: ευλύγιστος σαν γάτα {evlíjistos sán ǵáta} ~ as flexible as a cat

5. Conclusions

The conducted contrastive analysis of two hundred fifty eight (258) multi-word lexical units with the component “cat” in Bulgarian (41), Greek (68), Russian (100), and Serbian (49) leads to the clear conclusion that most frequently unfavourable features and negative connotations {181 (-) vs. 77 (+)} are attributed to this beloved domestic animal. Additionally, we must emphasize that remarkable cultural stereotypes reflecting the complicated conceptual framework and the unique ethnological parameters are clearly manifested in significant similarities and interesting differences related to the examined phrasemes.
