

REJOICE, O, FULL OF GIFTS! A TRANSLATION THEORY ANALYSIS OF KEXAPITΩMENH

OCTAVIAN GORDON¹

Abstract. In the present study I tried to analyse the New Testament hapax legomenon «κεχαριτωμένη» (Lk. 1: 28) not only from the perspective of its manuscript transmission within the frame of the biblical literature or from a hermeneutical point of view, but also from the perspective of its liturgical integration and use in the Eastern Church. The starting point of my research was the simultaneous existence in the liturgical Romanian current practice of at least three different equivalents of gr. κεχαριτωμένη: plină de dar (litt. ‘full of grace’), plină de daruri (litt. ‘full of gifts’) and plină de har (litt. ‘full of grace’). My investigation showed that, since the beginning of the Romanian literature, i.e. from the 16th century onwards, there are more than a dozen of more or less functional Romanian equivalents of this mariological epithet.

Keywords: κεχαριτωμένη, Church language, biblical text, liturgical text, confessional language.

1. ARGUMENT

1.1. The greeting (‘the salutation’)² addressed by Archangel Gabriel to Virgin Mary, recorded by the Greek biblical and liturgical literature as Xαῖρε κεχαριτωμένη (Lk. 1:28) – known in the Latin world as Ave, [Maria,] gratia plena –, knows, in the current Romanian liturgical literature, several versions, the best-known of which are: (1) Bucură-te, cea plină de har! ‘Rejoice, o, full of grace!'; (2) Bucură-te, cea plină de dar! ‘Rejoice, o, full of gift!';

¹ University of Bucharest, octaviangordon@yahoo.com.

This work was supported by the strategic grant POSDRU/89/1.5/S/62259, Project Applied Social, Human and Political Sciences. Postdoctoral Training and Postdoctoral Fellowships in Social, Human, And Political Sciences, funded in collaboration with the European Social Fund within the Sectorial Operational Program Human Resources Development, 2007-2013. The present article summarises and, in places, corrects the study published in Romanian in 2012 in the Theological Studies magazine (Gordon 2012). Unlike the article in Romanian, here I aim to present mainly the outcomes of the liturgical space analysis, without going into details about the biblical versions, the biblical text criticism issues, and other aspects adjacent to the main subject, which regards translation theory matters. I have also reassessed a great part of the theses and hypotheses presented in the first article on this theme, operating some retractationes, based on further research and the reactions of those who have read my article published in Theological Studies. I owe the English translation of this article to Cătălina Bogdan, English teacher.

² I showed in my article (Gordon 2012: 105–106) that the formula χαῖρε (‘Rejoice!') is a greeting specific to the hellenophone Antiquity, not an urge to (the state of) joy.

(3) Bucură-te, cea plină de daruri ‘Rejoice, o, full of gifts!’³. In the present article, I aim to analyse the evolution of this well-known liturgical phrase, trying to elucidate the circumstances that favoured the apparition of this lexical (idiomatic) variety.

The idea of the present paper came out of the mere observation, within the Orthodox worship, of the difference between the phrases Bucură-te, cea plină de dar! and Bucură-te, cea plină de daruri!, as well as of my remark and wonder at the liturgical coexistence of these two phrases. Within the philological biblical research, my analysis was recently preceded by two investigations of the same phrase, with its various Romanian versions.

A popularisation article written by Răzvan Perşa (2011), published on his personal blog, in which the author signals an issue of text criticism related to the mentioned biblical verse, and also proposes a ‘translation theory’ analysis. Noticing the mismatch between the phrase plină de dar (and the version plină de har) and the Greek participle κεχαριτωμένη, as well as their dependence on the Latin original gratia plena, Răzvan Perşa argues for the translation of the New Testament hapax κεχαριτωμένη by the phrase gifted with grace, adding a theological doctrinal comment.

In a much ampler and better documented elaboration (Conțac 2011), Emanuel Conțac made public the outcomes of his doctoral research, dedicating approximately 16 pages to the κεχαριτωμένη participle in Lk. 1:28, showing not only the varieties of the most important Romanian versions, but also adding a series of examples from the non-biblical Greek literature of the different valences of the verb χαριτοῦντας.

1.2. Therefore, based on this recent research in the field of biblical-philological research, which, in places, I will analyse, comment on, complete and correct, I propose my own analysis of the mariological epithet in question, both from the point of view of the biblical text evolution, as well as from the point of view of the presence of this biblical sequence in the liturgical literature. My hypothesis was that a correct translation theory analysis of a biblical text can only be done taking into account the possible liturgical reception of the respective text. I shall see in my analysis and especially in the conclusion, if this hypothesis can be demonstrated or not.

2. THE VERSE IN LK. 1:28 FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF TEXTUAL CRITICISM

For the verse in Lk. 1:28, there are two manuscript traditions (Metzger 1994: 108): the first, represented by an important number of manuscripts, as well as patristic texts, presents a shorter text: Χαῖτε, κεχαριτωμένη· ὁ κύριος μετὰ σοῦ (‘Rejoice, o, κεχαριτωμένη; the Lord is with you’), without the sequence εὐλογημένη σὺ ἐν γυναιξὶν (‘blessed are you among women’). This sequence, which recent Western criticism considers an addition, is found in the Byzantine tradition (textus receptus), being attested by important codices, such as Codex Alexandrinus, Codex Epraemi rescriptus, Codex Bezae, the Protoevangelium of James (11:1), most probably written in the second half of the 2nd century, and also several ³ I shall render the literal translation of the Romanian versions only on the first occurrences in my text, between brackets.

Church Fathers and writers. In addition to these, there are the Latin versions, which, with small fluctuations, attest the long version of the verse Lk. 1:28: (H)ave, gratia plena, Dominus tecum. Benedicta tu in mulieribus (Gordon 2012: 98–99).

I consider it noteworthy that the long version of the verse was sometimes accepted in the Byzantine hymnography, too, which can be relevant to both biblical textual criticism, and the aspects concerning translation theory, which I am dealing with in the present article.

Apart from the details related to the end of the verse, in the second part of his exposition, Răzvan Perșa, listing the main Romanian editions of the biblical text and graphically underlining the modifications suffered from an edition to another, rightly notices the following: (1) all the Romanian versions⁴ attest the second manuscript tradition, ‘the enlarged’; (2) the Romanian versions rather follow the structure of the Latin original than of the Greek one, as plină de dar / har cannot be a translation of the participle κεχαριτωμένη, but rather of the phrase gratia plena. The Latin phrase itself cannot be a translation of plena, but rather a loan from Jn. 1:14 (πλήρης χάριτος καὶ ἀληθείας, about God’s Word, the equivalent of the Vulgata phrase *plenum gratiae et veritatis*⁵) and from Acts 6:8, (Στέφανος δὲ πλήρης χάριτος καὶ δυνάμεως, the equivalent of the Latin Stephanus autem plenus gratia et fortitudine). For the origin of the Latin phrase and for its awkward competitor, the participle gratificata, see Gordon (2002: 101–104).

3. THE VERB ΧΑΡΙΤΩ IN THE HOLY SCRIPTURE

3.1. As Emanuel Conțac (2011: 209) remarked, it cannot be stated that the verb χαριτώ is a rare verb, the mentioned author showing by examples the multitude of the occurrences of this verb in the Greek literature, also as a perfect participle, as well as the semantic diversity of χαριτώ, in its different uses. However, as long as κεχαριτωμένη in Lk. 1:28 is related to the special semantics of the Gr. Χάρις in a biblical context, I am firstly interested in the biblical uses of χαριτώ, the inheritance of a biblical meaning, related to the non-biblical Greek literature or not.

3.2. In the New Testament⁶, χαριτώ appears only once, in Eph. 1:6: εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ἐν ᾧ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ ἡγαπημένῳ, a verse which Bartolomeu Anania (2001) translates by to the praise of the glory of His grace, by which He gifted us in the Beloved. The Vulgata equivalent of ἐχαρίτωσεν is gratificavit, ‘figura etymologica’ being maintained in Jerome’s translation, too: in laudem gloriae gratiae suae in qua gratificavit nos in dilecto. From the point of view of the relationship between χάριτος and έχαριτωσεν, the verse does not pose understanding problems: God – the subject of the verb – poured out His grace onto man; the action expressed by χαριτώ is the ‘giving’ of grace, which is God’s grace.

⁴ Apart from one recent edition (NT Iași 2002), elaborated in the Roman-Catholic environment, which uses the critical edition of Nestle-Aland for reference. Also, it is remarkable that a part of the editions published in the neoprotestant world in the second half of the 20th century print ‘the addition’ in italics (vide infra).

⁵ The use of the adjective plenus sometimes with the Ablative and at other times with the Genitive is nothing special, the competition of the two cases being attested ever since classical Latin.

⁶ I do not refer to the Apocryphal Gospels, where κεχαριτωμένη appears, also pointing directly to Virgin Mary.

3.3. For the Old Testament, I have two occurrences of *χαριτώ*⁷, both in the perfect participle form.

3.3.1. Κεχαριτωμένῳ in Sir. 18:17

Next I render the versions that I consulted for this verse:

- LXX: οὐκ ἴδοὺ λόγος ὑπὲρ δόμα ἀγαθόν καὶ ἀμφότερα παρὰ ὄνδρὶ κεχαριτωμένῳ.
- VUL: nonne ecce verbum super datum bonum et utraque cum homine iustificato.
- Ms. 45: Nu-i, iată, cuvântul decât darea bună? Și amândoao – la omul plin de har.
- Ms. 4389: Dară au nu iaste cuvântul mai bun decât darea cea bună? Ce amândoaoă sănt la omul cel mulțemitoriu ‘thankful’.
- B. 1688: Iată, nu iaste mai bun cuvântul decât darea cea bună? Și amândoao – la omul cel plin de dar.
- Vulgata 1760–1761: Au nu, iată, cuvântul preste darea bună? Ci amândoao cu omul le îndreptează ‘justifies’.
- Micu 1795: Au nu este mai bun cuvântul decât darea cea bună? Și amândoao sănt la omul cel plin de dar.
- Șaguna 1856–1858: Au nu iaste cuvântul mai bun decât darea cea bună? Și amândoao sănt la omul cel plin de dar.
- B. 1914: Au nu iaste cuvântul mai bun decât darea cea bună? Și amândoao sănt la omul cel plin de dar.
- Radu-Gal. 1938: Și dacă cuvântul este mai de preț decât darul cel de preț, omul cu mâna darnică ['the man with a generous hand'] să le adune laolaltă.
- B. 1968 sqq.⁸: Au nu este mai bun cuvântul decât darea cea bună? Și amândouă sănt la omul cel darnic ‘generous’.
- Anania 2001: Privește: nu e mai bună vorba decât o dare bună?: și una, și alta sunt la omul darnic.
- LXX-NEC 4/II 2007: Iată, nu este oare mai presus o vorbă [bună] decât un dar bogat? Bărbatul darnic le îmbină însă pe amândouă.

Among the Romanian versions of this verse, the oldest equivalent of the Gr. κεχαριτωμένῳ belongs to Nicolae Milescu Spătarul, kept in a revised form in Ms. 45 of the Romanian Academic Library. About this manuscript, containing the Old Testament, I now know, following the demonstration given by N. A. Ursu (1988–1989), that it served as the basis of Șerban’s Bible for the Old Testament: the Greceanu brothers are not the translators of the Bucharest Bible, as it used to be said until recently, but only the revisers of Milescu’s translation and of the Bucharest edition. It is quite unlikely that the original form, translated by Milescu Spătarul, should have been plin de har, as it is known that ⁷ The second occurrence to which I will make reference, the one in Psalms, is only found in Symmachus’ version, kept in Origen’s Hexapla (Contac 2011: 203).

⁸ By B. 1968 sqq., I indicate all the Orthodox Romanian Synodal Bible editions following B. 1968.

Milescu's translation was revised by an anonymous Moldavian: in all probabilities, Metropolitan Dosoftei. But, as I have demonstrated (Gordon 2012: 117–118), Dosoftei tried to introduce the term har in the church books that he edited, replacing the older dar, as the equivalent of the Gr. χάρις, but this initiative was not accepted by posterity.

Therefore, it can be assumed that the first Romanian equivalent of κεχαριτωμένω is the phrase plin de dar, also adopted by Ţerban's Bible, from a version of Milescu's translation not yet revised by the 'anonymous' Moldavian Dosoftei. Also, the equivalent phrase proposed for κεχαριτωμένω involves a loan and adaptation of the corresponding phrase in verse Lk. 1:28, plină de dar. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that the Latin equivalent of κεχαριτωμένω in the book of The Wisdom of Sirach is iustificato, not gratia pleno.

As for the version in Ms. 4389 (cel mulțemitoriu), in all probabilities, it is related to Sl. blagodatna in the Ostrog Bible (1581), the Sl. verb blago-dariti ('to thank'), being itself transferred from the Gr. *εὐχαριστέω*⁹. Therefore, it can be assumed that, in the Slavonic translation, a contamination (confusion?) was made between εὐχαριστέω and χαριτώω, also transmitted to Romanian, as it can be seen in Daniil Andrei Panoneanul's version, the supposed author of the translation kept in Ms. 4389.

Even more isolated from the phrase plin de dar is the translation of Vulgata: Ci amândoao cu omul le îndreptează. Here it is clear that the translator did not understand iustificato as a perfect participle in agreement with homine, but the future imperative of the verb iustificare, a homonym of the respective participle form.

Once the phrase plin de dar in the 1688 Bible was launched¹⁰, it was adopted as such by the following editions until the beginning of the 20th century, especially because, as I shall see below (under 5. and 6.), the corresponding phrase in Lk. 1:28 – plină de dar – was going to be present and extensively supported in the liturgical space, too.

Vasile Radu and Gala Galaction's version (1938) proposes a completely new meaning in the Romanian space for κεχαριτωμένω: [the man] cu mâna darnică, then adopted, without a careful reference to the original Greek (or Latin) text, by the most representative of the following editions (B. 1968, Anania 2001, LXX/NEC 4/II 2007¹¹), through the equivalent darnic (generous). Moreover, Eugen Munteanu, the author of the translation in LXX/NEC 4/II 2007, notes on the verse in question: 'Here I have one of the most psychologically refined observations of the book: politeness, generosity and good will are attributes of wisdom, while rudeness characterises stupidity. Anyway, unconditioned generosity itself urges us to follow the divine example (cf. Jas. 1:5: "Cel ce dă tuturor fără deosebire și fără mustrare"). Also, Emanuel Conțac (2011: 203), categorizing the meanings of κεχαριτωμένος in Greek literature, creates the category: 'the moral quality of a person' (amabil 'kind', generos 'generous', darnic 'charitable', plăcut 'pleasant'). I have not researched under what influence or for what reasons Radu-Gal. 1938 confers κεχαριτωμένω the meaning of ‘charitable’, ‘generous’, as this is not my immediate objective, but I do not see how κεχαριτωμένος, as a participle-adjective, could have this active meaning, since the participle form itself is *passive*¹². This meaning of ‘charitable’ cannot be – in my opinion – the equivalent of κεχαριτωμένω.

⁹ I thank Ana Stoykova and Florentina Geller, specialists in Slavonic philology, who have helped me understand the dependence of blagodariti on the Greek original.

¹⁰ The concept of 'advanced term' or 'advanced phrase' belongs to Adrian Marinescu from the University in München, with whom I had an ad hoc conversation.

¹¹ The last was also adopted by Emanuel Conțac (2011: 203).

Christian Wagner (1999: 324) argues for the meaning of ‘sich charmant / liebenswürdig / taktvoll erweisen’ of the verb χαριτώω from the context in Sir. 18:17¹³. Wagner argues for his opinion signalling the opposition between κεχαριτωμένω and μωρός from the next verse¹⁴, in a play on words with άχαριστως, an adverb which the German author interprets as ohne etwas Gutes zu tun. It seems strange that Wagner, although at a few lines’ distance, states the theological character of the verb in question and of the context in which it is used¹⁵, proposes a meaning distinct from any relationship with the theological aspects linked to χαριτώω and *χάρις*¹⁶.

3.3.2. Κεχαριτωμένου in Ps. 17:26 (Symmachos’ version)

In the footsteps left in the Romanian research by Emanuel Conțac, I have found a second Old-Testament biblical occurrence of the perfect participle of the verb χαριτώω, namely Symmachos’ version of Ps. 17:26: *μετὰ ὄστον ὀσιωθήσῃ καὶ μετὰ τοῦ κεχαριτωμένου χαριτωθήσῃ*¹⁷. Emanuel Conțac (2011: 203) places this occurrence of κεχαριτωμένος in the same semantic category of ‘a person’s moral qualities’ and proposes the translation: ‘With the pious man, You will act piously and with the kind man, You will act kindly’ (Cu omul pios Te vei purta cu pietate și cu omul amabil te vei purta cu amabilitate). However, my Colleague’s analysis does not reveal the reasons why the meaning of this κεχαριτωμένου and of the accompanying verb would be connected to the idea of ‘kindness’.

3.4. Χαριτώ in the New Testament. In the New Testament, apart from Lk. 1:28, χαριτώ occurs only once, in the Epistle to Ephesians (1,6): εἰς ἔπαινον δέξῃς τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ἐν ᾧ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ ἡγαπημένῳ, in Vulgata έχαρίτωσεν being rendered by gratificavit. In the traditional (Orthodox) Romanian biblical versions, the fragment is translated by: Spre lauda slavei darului Său, cu care ne-au dăruit pre noi a cel iubit (B. 1914), with small variations¹⁸. Emanuel Conțac (2011: 207–208), although he talks about the correlation that Calvin makes between Lk. 1:28 and Eph. 1:6, he does not include this biblical occurrence of χαριτώ in the category ‘God, as the agent of the action expressed by the verb charitoun’ in the semantic classification that he makes.

¹² The actual form is middle-passive (by no means active!), but the context – more precisely, the absence of a possible determiner in the Accusative case – does not leave room for interpretation in favour of the middle value.

¹³ Wagner also shows that the verb must be considered in a theological context, as, unlike its use in the Judeo-Christian writings, it rarely appears in the lay literature.

¹⁴ Sir. 18:18: μωρός ἀχαριστως ὄνειδει καὶ δόσις βασικάνου ἐκτήκει ὄφθαλμούς.

¹⁵ ‘Man wird also durchaus hinter χαριτοῦν einen theologischen Bezugsrahmen vermuten dürfen’ (1999: 324).

¹⁶ The same author underlines, at the same time, that in Lk. 1:28, the context also imposes a different meaning than the one in Sir. 18:17, namely Begnadeite.

¹⁷ Instead of μετὰ τοῦ κεχαριτωμένου χαριτωθήσῃ, the other Greek versions have the sequence μετὰ ἀνδρὸς ἀθῷου ἀθῷος ἔσῃ (with the innocent man You will be innocent).

¹⁸ I have chosen the version B. 1914 because, in my opinion, it is the most representative Romanian version in the Orthodox space.

4. THE ROMANIAN BIBLICAL VERSIONS¹⁹ OF THE VERSE LK. 1:28

4.1. In the Romanian biblical versions, Κεχαριτωμένη in Lk. 1:28 was assimilated to a series of phrases, most of which translate or adopt the translation of the Latin phrase gratia plena: cea²⁰ plină de dar (B. 1688, Vulgata 1760–1761, Micu 1795, NT 1818, Filotei 1854, Șaguna 1856–1858, B. 1914, Radu-Gal. 1938), with the version cea plină de har (Iași 1874, B. 1968, B. 1988, Anania 2001, NT Iași 2002). It is noteworthy that the phrase plină de har appears for the first time in a neoprotestant version and much later, almost a century after the Orthodox versions. In the second half of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th, in the neoprotestant environments there also appear other attempts of bringing the translation closer to the Greek original: cea înhăruită ‘the engraved’ (B. Iași 1871), cea dăruită ‘the gifted one’ (NT Nitz. 1897, B. 1911) or căreia și s'a făcut mare har ‘the one to which great grace was given’ (Corn. 1921, Corn. 1931). But the oldest versions have two renderings which were not adopted in any way in the subsequent biblical versions: bucurată ‘rejoiced’ (Tetraev. Coresi 1560–1561), after a Slavonic original (see infra), respectively în dar îndrăgită ‘endeared by gift’ (NT 1648), after the Latin original of Beza’s edition, namely gratis dilecta (Gordon 2012: 122–123).

4.2. Concerning the disjunction dar-har as the equivalent of the Gr. χάρις, in my previous article (Gordon 2012: 113–122), following a minute research referring both to the Greek original, and the Slavonic intermediary, I had reached the conclusion that the second term is a neologism of the 17th century in the ecclesiastic environment, promoted by Dosoftei (either as har, or as ghar), but not received by the posterity of church writings, because, shortly after Dosoftei, the terminology promoted by Antim Ivireanul establishes itself. Then I stated that this attempt of Dosoftei’s to replace dar by har is ‘an isolated linguistic fact’ (Gordon 2012: 121), a statement which I must correct, following the discovery of other traces of this Graecism in the written church language at the end of the 17th century. However, the survival of the older term dar – which rendered, through the Sl. дар, several Greek terms: χάρις = ‘grace’; δῶρον = ‘gift’, ‘present’, χάρισμα = ‘gift’, ‘charisma’, δωρεά = ‘gift’, ‘reward’, δῶσις = ‘the act of giving’, ‘giving’ (Miklosich 1865: дар; Meyer 1935: дар) –, at the cost of abandoning the neologism har, remains, for the traditional liturgical space, a certainty for the 18th–19th centuries and the first half of the 20th. Only as late as the end of the 19th century, under the influence of protestant theology, the term har reappears in the academic discourse, but in worship books it appears only as late as the second half of the 20th century.

4.3. The replacement of dar by har in the Orthodox worship books was not complete, but, in the space of biblical literature, starting with B. 1968, the replacement was exhaustively operated and therefore led to the change of the phrase plină de dar in Lk. 1:28

¹⁹ By ‘Romanian biblical version’ I mean an autonomous biblical corpus, not integrated in the traditional church worship, such as the Bible, the New Testament or The Four Gospels. To make a distinction, below (under 5. and 6.) I am going to talk about the functional biblical versions of the Orthodox worship (Gospel Book, Apostle, Prophetologion), respectively the reception of the verse Lk. 1:28 in the Byzantine hymnography.

²⁰ The sequence ceea ce ești ‘the one who are’ also appears as the demonstrative article cea ‘the one’.

into plină de har. Of course, at least in the case of the phrase plină de dar, the replacement was an internal ‘amendment’ procedure, without referring to the Greek original, because, as I have seen, this phrase, either as plină de har, or as plină de dar, faithfully renders the Latin phrase gratia plena, not the Gr. κεχαριτωμένη.

4.4. I have also shown that the translation by endowed with grace, which Emanuel Conțac (2011: 212) proposes as ‘acceptable to all Christian confessions’ has a confessional hermeneutical character and is close to a neoprotestant charitology, incompatible with an Eastern charitology (Gordon 2012: 127–130). Unanimous acceptability from the confessional point of view is therefore not possible for such a phrase.

5. LK. 1:28 IN THE BIBLICAL VERSIONS USED IN THE ORTHODOX WORSHIP

5.1. In this section, I am trying to make a shift in my analysis from the biblical editions of the verse in question to the worship books with Byzantine hymnographic compositions. As it is well-known, biblical texts have functioned in a liturgical context since the first decades of Christianity. Biblical corpora had not been made yet, let alone canonised, when Old and New Testament fragments were read in Christian worship. This practice acquired new dimensions in Byzantium, which led to the establishment of special corpora of biblical texts that were read in worship, along with the composition of a typikon and the development of a church calendar.

5.2. In the Roman space, the best known such corpora were the Lectionaries, and, in the Byzantine space, The Gospel Book, The Apostle and The Psalter. What is specific to these biblical corpora is the ordering of the pericopes read according to the church calendar and typikon, and not in the order known from the biblical books²¹. Of course, not all the fragments in the Gospels are found in The Gospel Book and not all the fragments in The Acts of the Apostles or the Epistles are found in The Apostle. To the four mentioned liturgical collections, I add two more: (1) The Sermon Book (Kazanija), important because it often quotes from the text of the Gospel pericope text which it refers to; and (2) The Prophetologion, a collection of biblical texts – mainly from the Old Testament, which are read out during Vespers.

5.3. An attempt to list all the places where the verse in Lk. 1:28 appears in these collections of biblical fragments, in one form or another would be a huge workload and not absolutely necessary for the purposes of this article. This kind of undertaking could be carried out for each category of liturgical books, possibly also according to the original underlying each edition. In this chapter, I aim to highlight only some²² of the occurrences of the verse Lk. 1:28 in the biblical worship collections to track if there is a communication between these versions and the Bible or New Testament versions. I propose the same perspective for the next chapter, too, Κεχαριτωμένη in Byzantine hymnography (see infra, under 6.).

²¹ The Psalter was also integrated in worship, divided into the so-called ‘kathismata’, but these succeed each other in the numerical order of the Psalms in the Bible.

²² The criteria according to which I have chosen the versions that I have consulted are the following: 1) their age; 2) their impact on other editions [as it results from the descriptions given by modern philologists, see Bianu-Hodoș 1903; Cartojan 1980, Gheție–Mareș 1985, Gheție 1997]; 3) the approximate period of the changes in the Orthodox Bible editions (as here I am talking about worship books in the Orthodox space); 4) accessibility to the respective editions.

5.4. Among Kazanias (Collections of Homilies) and *Gospel Books*²³, the equivalent of the Gr. Κεχαριτωμένη (through a Slavonic intermediary, of course) is, until the turn of the 17th century, the phrase ceea ce ești cu bun dar dăruită ‘the one who are gifted with a good gift’ (Govora 1642, Varlaam 1643, Dealu 1644, București 1682, Bălgard 1699), also existing as ‘[you are truly] dăruită’²⁴. As far as the epithet bun ‘good’ in the phrase bun dar is concerned, it recalls the equivalence between the Gr. χάρις and darul cel bun ‘the good gift’ that I also find in the Horologion from Sibiu (1696): Și Gavriile spune de binele darului celui bun (Gr. καὶ Γαβριὴλ τὴν χάριν εὐαγγελίζεται). This coincidence may be an indicator that, in worship, unlike the Bible translations, this mariological expression based on the verse in Lk 1:28 was in use. The presence of the phrase bun dar / darul cel bun clearly shows that the Slavonic original of the phrase was not obradovannaa (Gordon 2012: 124-5), but the term blagodatnaia. The most likely hypothesis is that also in the Slavonic literature, the same dissociation between the biblical text and the liturgical text occurs (see details infra, under 6.). The fact that today, the Slavonic versions of the Bible have adopted the term blagodatnaia, and not obradovannaa in Lk. 1:28, shows the prevalence in time of the liturgical text over the biblical versions.

5.5. On the contrary, in the case of the Romanian versions, I notice that the phrase proposed, in the biblical literature, for the first time²⁵ by B. 1688 (see supra, under 4.1.), namely plină de dar, was going to establish itself in the liturgical space, too. Thus, all the Gospel Books, starting with the bilingual edition of the Hellenic-Wallachian Gospel of 1693, adopt the phrase plină de dar from the edition of Șerban’s Bible. Therefore, I can state that Gospel Books, starting with the end of the 17th century, is the tribune from which this Romanian biblical phrase, plină de dar, was going to be transmitted to the common Orthodox believer²⁶ from the pulpit at each feast of the Annunciation. I consider that to be particularly significant, as, until relatively recently, the word of the Scripture was accessible to the common man only within the worship, owning a personal Bible being rare before the 19th century.

5.6. Regarding the introduction of the phrase plină de har in Gospel Books, it appears together with The Gospel of 1964, that is four years before the phrase plină de dar was replaced by plină de har in the Orthodox Bibles. Of course, I mainly refer to the ²³ I have chosen to group together these two different collections, as Kazanias practically adopt liturgical formulae present in the Gospel.

²⁴ ‘Rejoice, dăruită (o, gifted)’ also appears in Dosoftei 1683: 138r-139r, in chants 8 and 9 of The Annunciation Canon.

²⁵ This ‘first time’ must, however, be considered with a grain of salt, as long as the problem of the Bucharest Bible sources regarding the New Testament has not been clarified yet. Also see supra (under 3.3.1.2.) – the comment on the phrase plin de har in Ms. 45.

²⁶ I do not know what Gospel Books were used in the Greek-catholic worship in the 17th-18th centuries, but I have all the reasons to believe that they are the same as for the Orthodox space.

replacement of the term dar by har, not of the whole phrase²⁷. In all the editions consulted (1964, 1983, 2010), where the phrase plină de har appears, there is also the word har in the following verse: ai aflat har ‘you have found grace’.

6. KEXAPITΩMENH IN THE BYZANTINE HYMNOGRAPHY

Apart from the biblical-liturgical corpora (Gospels, The Apostle), ‘The Bible’ also ‘entered’ the Byzantine hymnography itself, through themes, motifs, onomastic, formulae, phrases, terms. The reception of the Annunciation episode in hymnography is one of central importance to the Byzantine worship (Rogobete 2009), which makes the meeting between Archangel Gabriel and Virgin Mary to be present in the hymnography of the Feast in a very diverse and extensive way. Only the term κεχαριτωμένη (including in its oblique forms) appears in The March Menaion, on the Annunciation day (25th March) for no less than 36 times. But the echo of this moment in the history of Salvation through the Incarnation of the Logos is not only felt in the hymnography around the Feast of the Annunciation, but it is also liturgically heard on the days before and after this feast, as well as in many other liturgical contexts. Moreover, calling Virgin Mary κεχαριτωμένη becomes one of the best-known names of the Virgin in the Byzantine hymnography, most frequently met when she is addressed, along with Θεοτόκε (‘God-Bearer’), Νόμφη ἀνόμφεντε (‘Unwedded Virgin’) etc., which makes this name to be found in countless troparia, verses, sticheiras, canon stanzas, prayers, throughout the church year.

Tracking the Romanian translation of the term κεχαριτωμένη, in various editions of worship books, as it appears in all the places in the Byzantine hymnography, would mean a huge workload, which would delay the publication of this article by years, turning it into a several-hundred page book. Therefore, I aim to analyse a few more representative occurrences – those that hold a central role in the Byzantine worship and which are generally very well-known to those who participate actively and regularly in the Orthodox worship, a part of them being sung not only by the choir or in the altar, but by the whole ecclesiastic community. The Byzantine texts featuring κεχαριτωμένη, which I have systematically researched, are the following: 1. the troparion, tone 5, in the service of the Lity (it appears in Hieratika and Horologia); The Paraklesis or The Canon of Repentance to the Mother of God – the second troparion (magalinarion) after Chant IX (it usually appears in Horologia); the troparion (ἀπολυτίκιον) of the Annunciation (it appears in the Menaia for March, on the 25th day, and in Horologia); the troparion (ἀπολυτίκιον) of the Presentation of the Lord (it appears in the Menaia for February, on the 2nd day, and in Horologia); the Resurrection hymn to the Theotokos [The Angel cried out ...] (it appears in Pentecostaria, in some Horologia, as well as in many psaltic music anthologies); the Axion Estin of Saint Basil the Great’s Liturgy [All of creation rejoices in you ...] (it appears in Hieratika and in The Octoechos). It also appears in other texts in Menaia, The Octoechos and Horologia, which I have not analysed systematically, but which I am going to refer to when they interact with my excursion.

Regarding the Romanian equivalents of the Gr. Κεχαριτωμένη in the Romanian hymnography, I can state that, at the beginning of the Romanian church, biblical or liturgical literature, there is not a direct reference to this Greek term. The versions underlying the translation are Slavonic (obradovannaa and blagodatnaia), and, at a given moment, in the 17th century, the phrase plină de dar was invented, after the Lat. gratia plena. The fact that Dosoftei's Hieratikon (1683) used the expression de dragostea lui Dumnezeu plină Marie 'Mary, full of God's love' – where I recognise a sort of mixture of ideas between the phrase în dar îndrăgită in NT 1648 and the later attested phrase plină de dar – confirms my assumption (see supra, under 5.5) that it is not Ţerban's Bible that first uses the phrase plină de dar, but it adopts a previous liturgical (or maybe biblical) version.

²⁷ See supra, 4.3.

The dependence on the Sl. Obradovannaa is made visible in early equivalents like preabucurată or încungiurată de bucurie (Ciasloveț 'Horologion' 1696), phrases which I can also associate with Bucură-te, bucurată in Coresi's Tetraevanghel 'The Four Gospels' (see supra, 4.1.). However, these were not echoed by the subsequent Orthodox Church books.

Instead, the phrase plină de dar is spread along with the printing of the Târgovişte Ceasoslov 'Horologio' (1715) and becomes the standard ('canonized') phrase in the Romanian hymnography, both in Horologia (Târgovişte 1715, Rădăuţi 1745, Bucureşti 1748, Iaşi 1797), and Hieratika, Menaia, Pentecostaria a.o. (Gordon 2012: 140–148).

At the same time, I could state that, along with this process of liturgical establishment of the phrase plină de dar, a development of the phrase was taking place, facilitated by the polysemy of the word dar in Slavonic and Romanian – cumulating the meanings expressed in Greek by χάρις, χάρισμα a.o. – into plină de daruri (already in the Târgovişte Ceasoslov [Horologion], together with the mother-phrase plină de har). It is a purely Romanian creation, without any correspondent in other languages, and the reasons of this phraseological development might (also) be prosodic, in the context of psalitic musical compositions. At least in one case, that of the Resurrection hymn to the Theotokos, tone 3, the phrase plină de daruri becomes canonised by establishment in the musical register. The phrases plină de dar and plină de daruri are alternatively found in the same psalitic music book, the Neamț Anthology (1840). The process is not new and must not surprise us, if I think about the establishment and perpetuation, for centuries on end, of some homeric phrases 'stuck' in the prosodic pattern of the dactylic hexametre.

Another noteworthy fact is the 'survival', towards the end of the 18th century, of the formula ceea ce ești cu dar dăruită 'the one who are gifted with a gift', which I have also met before Antim's books, as ceea ce ești cu bun dar dăruită (in Sermon Books and Gospel Books) or, simply, dăruită (Dosoftei). This phrase, ceea ce ești cu dar dăruită, has been kept until today, in the second half of the 20th century, since the series of Hieratika printed starting with 1967 attest it, in an adjusted form: ceea ce ești cu har dăruită 'the one who are gifted with grace', in a period when, in the Orthodox space, the term dar had started to be replaced by har. What is interesting is that a series of parallel Hieratika, published since 1973, under the aegis of the same Biblical and Mission Institute of The Romanian Orthodox Church, continue the tradition of the phrase ceea ce ești plină de dar, which was used in worship in the 17th century, but not in hymnography, where mainly Slavonic texts were used. The presence of these phrases – whose source is, undoubtedly, the Sl. blagodatnaia, as an intermediary of the Gr. Κεχαριτωμένη – in the biblical literature used in worship could be the basis of some remnants of the hymnographic literature. Only this way can the presence of ceea ce ești cu dar dăruită in Mineiul lunii februarie 'The February Menaion' from Râmnic (1779) be explained, in the Ceaslov 'Horologion' from Râmnic, and then the series of Mineie ale lunii februarie ‘Menaia for February’ from Buda (1806), Neamțu (1847), București (1852), Sibiu (1853), București (1893), Cernica (1929), in the Triod ‘Triodion’ of 1897 from Bucharest, reprinted in 1986, or even in the Catavasier ‘The Katabasiae Book’ of 2005, the same books extensively attesting the presence of the phrase plină de dar or even plină de daruri.

7. CONCLUSIONS

After this analysis, which does not claim to be exhaustive and invites to the investigation of other documents of the Romanian church literature, several conclusions can be drawn.

Confronting the equivalents, direct or through an intermediary (Slavonic or Latin), of the Greek participle κεχαριτωμένη, I notice a relative communication between hymnographic and biblical texts at the beginning of church literature, then a relative canonisation and dissemination of the expression plină de dar, with the prosodically explicable version plină de daruri, at the beginning of the 17th century, and beginning in the second half of the 19th century, an autonomization of the biblical version compared to the variety of liturgical versions.

Although in the Orthodox space, in the 20th century, I notice a visible tendency to amend according to the Greek original, the phrase plină de dar or plină de har remains a mark of the transfer from a Latin original. Both in biblical and liturgical texts, only the term dar was replaced by har, not the entire expression. However, in liturgical texts, and especially in hymnography, a series of old equivalents of the Gr. κεχαριτωμένη, mediated by the Sl. obradovanna and blagodatnaia have been passed down to the most recent official editions of the Orthodox Church.

Strictly in the space of biblical literature, a unity of the Church language until the middle of the 19th century can be noticed. That is when the first (neo)protestant biblical printings appear.

However, the neological rediscovery of the term har in these printings is avoided until the second half of the 20th century, when I witness a programmatic, but not consistent replacement, of the old term dar by har, of course, leading to the replacement of the phrase plină de dar by plină de har. There was an attempt to adjust the terms also in the liturgical literature, but, some texts, known by a great number of those who frequent the Orthodox liturgical space and supported by a canonisation based on the metrical principles of the Byzantine prosody, maintained the old formulae, plină de dar and plină de daruri.

Strictly related to the analysed mariological expressions, I have already noticed an unexpected variety in the Romanian space, which strongly contrasts the uniqueness of the Gr. κεχαριτωμένη, no matter the Church literary genre in which it is used. At the same time, the liturgical functionality – deprived of linguistic scruples – of a mariological epithet, in its multiple forms, regardless of the (Slavonic or Latin) intermediary through which it got to be used in the Romanian church texts is remarkable. Also, it is noteworthy that the Orthodox literature is penetrated and liturgically permeated by a Western phrase (gratia plena), and conversely, that, although the translation uses its own pattern, the Roman and Greek-catholic spaces have biblically used until the 20th century a traditional terminology which today is perceived as Orthodox.

REFERENCES

Bibles and biblical literature (chronologically ordered)

LXX = Septuaginta, id est Vetus Testamentum graece iuxta LXX interpres, edidit Alfred Rahlfs, 1971, Stuttgart, Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft.

VUL = Biblia Sacra Iuxta Vulgatam Versionem, adiuvantibus B. Fischer, I. Gribomont, H.F.D. Sparks, W. Thiele, recensuit et brevi apparatu critico instruxit R. Weber, editionem quintam emendatam retractatam praeparavit Roger Gryson, 2007, Stuttgart, Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft.

Ostrog = 1581, Библія сирець книги Ветхого і Нового Завета по іззыкіу словенскому (...), Ostrog.

Tetraev. Coresi 1560-1561 = Tetraevangelul tipărit de Coresi (Brașov), compared with Evangheliarul lui Radu de la Mănicești (1574), edited by Florica Dimitrescu, 1963, București, Editura Academiei Republicii Populare Române.

NT 1648 = Noul Testament sau Împăcarea au leagea noao a lui Iisus Hristos, Domnului nostru [...], Bălgad, edited by Dafila-Lucia Aramă et al., 1988, Alba Iulia, Editura Episcopiei Ortodoxe Române.

Ms. 45 = Romanian Academy Library, Cluj, Romanian Manuscript No 45, containing the 17th century translation (from Greek into Romanian) of the Old Testament, by Nicolae Milescu, revised by an anonymous (probably Dosoftei) in the second half of the 18th century.

Ms. 4389 = Romanian Academy Library, Romanian Manuscript No 4389, containing the 17th century translation (from Slavonic and Latin into Romanian) of the Old Testament, probably by Daniil Andreaman Panoneanul.

B. 1688 = Biblia, adecă Dumnezeiasca Scriptură a Vechiului și Noului Testament [...], București.

Hellenic-Wallachian Gospel of 1693 = Θεῖον καὶ ἱερὸν Εὐαγγέλιον Ἑλληνοβλάχικον [...] = Sfânta și Dumnezeiasca Evanghelie elinească și rumânească [...], București.

Vulgata 1760-1761 = Biblia Vulgata, Blaj, 1760-1761, first edited in 2005, București, Editura Academiei Române.

Micu 1795 = Biblia, adecă Dumnezeiasca Scriptură a legii vechi și a ceii noao [...], Blaj.

Filotei 1854 = Biblia sau Testamentul vechiului și nou [...], Buzău.

Şaguna 1856-1858 = Biblia, adecă Dumnezeiasca Scriptură [...], Sibiu.

B. Iași 1874 = Sânta Scriptură a Vechiului și a Noului Testamentu [...], Iași, Tipo-litografia H. Goldner.

NT Nitz. 1897 = Noul așezămînt tradus din limba originală greacă [...] de Dr. N. Nitzulescu [...], București.

B. 1911 = Sfânta Scriptură a Vechiului și Noului Testament [...], București.

B. 1914 = Biblia, adică Dumnezeiasca Scriptură a Legii Vechi și a celei Nouă [...], Synodal version, București.

Corn. 1921 = Biblia sau Sfânta Scriptură a Vechiului și Noului Testament, translated by D. Cornilescu, București [followed by other three editions: 1924, 1926 and 1931].

Radu-Gal. 1938 = Biblia, adică Dumnezeiasca Scriptură a Vechiului și a Noului Testament [...], by V. Radu and G. Galaction, București, Fundația pentru Literatură și Artă «Regele Carol II».

The Gospel 1964 = Sfânta și dumnezeiasca Evanghelie, București, Editura Institutului Biblic și de Misiune al Bisericii Ortodoxe Române [followed by other two editions: 1983, 2010].

B. 1968 = Biblia sau Sfânta Scriptură [...], Synodal version, București, 1968.

Anania 2001 = Biblia sau Sfânta Scriptură [...], by B. Anania, București.

LXX-NEC 4/II 2007 = Septuaginta, vol. 4/II, ed. by Cr. Bădiliță et al., Iași, Colegiul Noua Europă, Polirom.

NT Iași 2002 = Noul Testament, translated by A. Bulai and A. Budău, Editura Sapientia, Iași.

Liturgical books (chronologically ordered)

Govora 1642 = Evanghelie învățătoare [...], Govora Monastery.

Varlaam 1643 = Carte românească de învățătură [...], known as 'Cazania lui Varlaam' ['Varlaam's Sermon Book'], Iași.

Dealu 1644 = Evanghelie învățătoare [...], Dealu Monastery.

Bucureşti 1682 = Svânta şi Dumnezaiasca Evanghelie [...], Bucureşti.
 Bălgrad 1699 = Chiriacodromion sau Evanghelie învățatoare [...], Bălgrad.
 Dosoftei's Hieratikon 1683 = Liturghie şi Rugăciuni, Iaşi.
Ciaslovef 'Horologion' 1696 = Ciaslovef [...], Sibiu.
Ceasoslov 'Horologion' 1715 = Ceasoslov [...], Târgovişte.
Ceasoslov 'Horologion' Rădăuţi 1745 = Ceasoslov [...], Rădăuţi.
Ceasoslov 'Horologion' Bucureşti 1748 = Ceasoslov [...], Bucureşti.
Ceasoslov 'Horologion' Iaşi 1797 = Ceasoslov [...], Iaşi.
Neamţ Anthology (1840) = N. Frimu, Antologia de cântări bisericeşti, Neamţ.
Hieratikon 1967 = Liturghier, cuprinzând [...], Bucureşti, reprinted with corrections in 1967/1974/1980/1987.
Hieratikon 1973 = Liturghier, cuprinzând [...], Bucureşti, reprinted with corrections in 1973/2000/2001/2008/2012.
Mineiul lunii februarie 'The February Menaion' Râmnic 1779 = Mineiul luna lui februarie [...], Râmnic. [Other February Menaia: Buda (1806), Neamţ (1847), Bucureşti (1852), Sibiu (1853), Bucureşti (1893), Cernica (1929)].
Ceaslov 'Horologion' 1781 = [Ceasoslov], Râmnic.
Triod 'Triodion' Bucureşti 1897 = Triodiu, adică Trei cântări [...], Bucuresci, Tipo-Litografia 'Cărților Bisericescii'. [reprinted with corrections in 1986, Bucureşti, Editura Institutului Biblic şi de Misiune al Bisericii Ortodoxe Române].
Catavasier 'The Katabasiae Book' 2005 = Catavasier, Bucureşti, Editura Institutului Biblic şi de Misiune al Bisericii Ortodoxe Române.

SECONDARY LITERATURE

Bianu, I., N. Hodoş, 1903, Bibliografia românească veche: 1508-1830, Bucureşti, Stabilimentul Grafic J. V. Socec.

Cartojan, N., 1980, Istoria literaturii române veche, Bucureşti, Minerva.

Contac, E., 2011, Dilemele fidelităţii: condiţionări culturale şi teologice în traducerea Bibliei, Cluj-Napoca, Logos.

Gheție, I. (ed.), 1997, Istoria limbii române literare. Epoca veche (1532-1780), Bucureşti, Editura Academiei Române.

Gheție, I., Al. Mareş, 1985, Originile scrisului în limba română, Bucureşti, Editura Științifică și Enciclopedică.

Gordon, O., 2012, "Bucură-te, cea plină de daruri! Note traductologice pe marginea epitetului mariologic κεχαριτωμένη", Studii Teologice, 2, 85–160.

Metzger, Bruce, 1994, A Textual Commentary on the Greek New Testament, Stuttgart, Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft.

Meyer, K. H., 1935, Altkirchenslavisch-griechisches Wörterbuch des Codex Suprasliensis, Glückstadt [u.a.], Augustin.

Miklosich, F., 1865, Lexicon Palaeoslovenico-Graeco-Latinum, Vindobonae, Braumueller.

Persă, R., 2011, Lc. 1:28 Bucură-te cea plină de dar sau cea plină de har? <http://persarazvan.blogspot.com/2011/10/lc-128-bucura-te-cea-plina-de-dar-sau.html>, published on October, the 28th, 2011, still accessible on February, the 15th, 2013.

Rogobete, Cr. C., 2009, H ἐορτὴ τοῦ Εἰαγγελισμοῦ στὸ χριστιανικὸ ἔορτολόγιο, PhD thesis, 'Aristotle' University of Thessaloniki.

Ursu, N. A., 1988-1989, "Noi informaţii privitoare la manuscrisul autograf şi la textul revizuit al Vechiului Testament tradus de Nicolae Milescu", Limba română, (I) 37/5, 455–468; (II) 37/6, 521–534; (III), 38/1, 31–46; (IV) 38/2, 107–121; (V) 38/5, 463–470.

Wagner, C., 1999, Die Septuaginta-Hapaxlegomena im Buch Jesus Sirach, Berlin / New York, Walter de Gruyter.