Zusammenfassung Die geläufige Bibelausgabe in der Rumänisch-Orthodoxen Kirche – die Synodale Bibel – bietet einen auffälligen Text in Hosea 4. Auf das Fehlen des ganzen Verses 4 wurde schon hingewiesen (Pentiuc). Unbemerkt in der Forschung blieb meiner Erkenntnis nach das Fehlen des letzten Teils von V. 3. Dieser fehlerhafte Text hat seinen Ursprung in der Bibelübersetzung aus 1936 und wurde unverändert in allen folgenden Bibelausgaben gedruckt. Ist im Falle von V.4 mit einer absichtlichen Auslassung eines unangenehmen Textes zu rechnen? Oder lassen sich diese Auffälligkeiten durch die von dem Übersetzer Vasile Radu benutzten Quellen und Werken erklären? Diese und andere Hypothesen über die Entstehung der spezifischen Lesungen zu Hosea 4 in der Synodalen Bibel werden im Folgenden analysiert. Im Falle von V. 3 und 5 scheint Vasile Radus Übersetzung von zwei deutschsprachigen Werken abhängig zu sein: Emil Kautzschs Ausgabe des Alten Testaments und Ernst Sellins Kommentar zu den kleinen Propheten.
Schlüsselwörter: Rumänische Bibelübersetzung, Hosea 4, Vasile Radu, Emil Kautzsch, Ernst Sellin.

1. Introduction

Translating the Book of Hosea is a demanding undertaking: Some verses from the Masoretic Text (MT) are obviously unfaithful to their original meaning, which is difficult to reconstruct. The Septuagint presents significant differences from the Hebrew text (cf. 13:4). Textual criticism has recommended conjectures for some instances where the Hebrew text seems unclear. Hosea rivals only with Job as regards the obscurity of the Masoretic Text (Seow 1992: 292).

The Romanian Orthodox Church uses two versions of the Bible: (1) the most recent one is the anniversary Bible of Metropolitan Bartolomeu Anania (BAR), and (2) the most widespread edition is the so-called Synodal Edition (SYN).<sup>1</sup> In SYN, Hos 4 illustrates very well the textual problems of the book. Conțac (2011: 195-196) have drawn attention upon the surprising translation of v. 11. It was also pointed out that some parts have been omitted from the text. V. 4 is missing entirely (Pentiu 2001: 340). As far as we know, the absence of a part from v. 3 has passed unnoticed.

Could such features be the result of unintentional mistakes? Or is this a theological option, possibly aimed at “rectifying” an inconvenient text – as suggested by the absence of v. 4? What does the current text tell us about the bibliographic tools used by translators? This study seeks to find an answer to such questions.

2. Hos 4:1-4 in the Synodal Bible (SYN)

In the Romanian synodal edition of the Holy Bible, the text from Hos 4:1-4 differs from all modern translations of the Bible we managed to read so far. A comparison with the text of the New Revised Standard Version (NRSV) highlights these differences:<sup>2</sup>

SYN (2008)	SYN (English translation)	NRSV
1. Ascultați cuvântul Domnului, voi, copiii ai lui Israel, că Domnul stă la judecată cu locuitorii pământului,	1. Hear the word of the LORD, ye children of Israel; for the LORD has an indictment against the inhabitants of the earth.	1. Hear the word of the LORD, O people of Israel; for the LORD has an indictment against the inhabitants of the land. There is no faithfulness or loyalty, and no knowledge of God in the land.
2. Că nu mai este credință, nici iubire, nici cunoaștere de Dumnezeu în țară.	2. Because there is no faith, love, or knowledge of God in the land.	2. Swearing, lying, and murder, and stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed.
3. Toți jură strâmb, mint,ucid, fură și sunt desfrânați; săvârșesc fapte silnice, iar sângele vărsat curge peste sânge.	3. False swearing, lying, murder, stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed.	3. Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish; together with the wild animals and the birds of the air, even the fish of the sea are perishing.
4. Pentru aceasta țara e în mare jale, iar cei ce o locuiesc sunt fără vlagă.	4. Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish.	4. Yet let no one contend, and let none accuse, for with you is my contention, O priest.
5. Tu te poticnești ziua, iar noaptea se poticnește cu tine și profetul și voi face să piară poporul tău.	5. You stumble by day; the prophet shall also stumble with you by night, and I shall make your people perish.	5. You shall stumble by day; the prophet also shall stumble with you by night, and I will destroy your mother.

(a) V. 5 is the same in SYN and NRSV. Instead, vv. 1 to 4 differ significantly in SYN, where the text is, in fact, shorter;

(b) V. 1 of the NRSV is divided into vv. 1 and 2 in SYN;

(c) As a result, v. 2 of the NRSV is v. 3 in SYN;

(d) It would be expected that v. 3 of NRSV would be found in v. 4 of SYN. But v. 4 from SYN reproduces only the first half of v. 3 from NRSV: “Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish”;

(e) The second half of v. 3 (“together with the wild animals and the birds of the air, even the fish of the sea are perishing”) is missing in SYN;

(f) V. 4 of NRSV is entirely absent in SYN.

How could one explain the textual differences in SYN? To elucidate this question, we first need to resort to earlier Romanian translations. It may be noted that Bible editions that circulated in the Romanian Orthodox Church, from the Bible of 1688 (the first printed Bible in Romanian, translated following the Septuagint)<sup>3</sup> to the Bible of 1914 (SYN), did not include a modified text in Hos 4:1-4. The variant from SYN appears in B1936:

B1936	English Translation
1. Ascultați cuvântul Domnului, voi, feciori ai lui Israil, căci Domnul stă la judecată cu locuitorii pământului,	1. Hear the word of the Lord, ye sons of Israel, for the Lord has an indictment with the inhabitants of the earth,
2. Căci nu mai este credință, nici iubire, nici cunoaștere de Dumnezeu în țară.	2. For there is no faith, love, or knowledge of God in the land.
3. Toți jură strâmb, mint,ucid, fură și sunt desfrânați; săvârșesc fapte silnice, iar sângele vărsat curge peste sânge.	3. False swearing, lying, murder, stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed.
4. Pentru aceasta, țara e în mare jale, iar cei ce locuiesc sunt fără vlagă.	4. For this, the country is in great mourning, and those who live in it are flabby.
5. Tu te vei poticni ziua, iar noaptea se va poticni profetul împreună cu tine, și voiu distruge tumimul tău.	5. You shall stumble by day; the prophet shall also stumble with you by night, and I will destroy your Thummim.

The differences between SYN and B1936 are minor, as compared the lack of convergence with previous editions. Therefore, B1936 is the source of the specific reading of the text in Hos 4:1-4, found in SYN. Subsequent editions of the Bible, edited by the Romanian Orthodox Church (1968, 1975, 1982, 1988, 2008) have reproduced, with minor changes, the text of B1936, and thus the modification of the text from Hos 4:1-4 is found in all these editions. An exception is the anniversary Bible of Metropolitan Bartolomeu Anania (BAR).

The translators of B1936 were Bishop Nicodim Munteanu, the priest writer Gala Galaction and priest professor Vasile Radu. The translation of the Prophetic Books was made by Vasile Radu, as we learn from Gala Galaction's Diary.<sup>4</sup>

In what follows we shall focus only on issues related to vv. 3-5 of Hos 4 in B1936 and SYN.

3. Omissions in v. 3

V. 3 of Hos 4 can be divided into four parts, if we follow the disjunctive accents of the Hebrew text (BHS 1990: 994):

v. 3	(a)	(α) Pentru aceasta țara e în mare jale, (β) iar cei ce o locuiesc sunt fără vlagă, (γ) împreună cu fiarele câmpului și cu păsările cerului;	Therefore, the land mourns, and all who live in it languish; together with the wild animals and the birds of the air,
	(b)	chiar și peștii mării pier	even the fish of the sea are perishing.

According to this division, in SYN one can find v. 3αβ, but v. 3αγβ is missing. Or, more simply and taking into account the content, the part related to animals in v. 3 is absent in SYN. The absence of this part of v. 3 from all current Synodal Bible editions (except BAR) is due to the text of B1936. As far as we know, this flaw remained unobserved in Romanian commentaries on Hosea (Chirilă 1999; Pentiu 2001).

The translations of the Bible that circulated in the Romanian Orthodox Church before the B1936 were based on the text of the Septuagint. For the B1936 version the translators used both the Greek and the Hebrew texts. Is the flaw in v. 3 due to the sources used by B1936? Let us examine the possible sources that could have influenced v. 3 in B1936.

3.1. The Text of LXX

We do not know what edition of the LXX was used by Nicodim Munteanu, Gala Galaction, and Vasile Radu. The first edition of Rahlfs' Septuagint, published in 1935, had not been available, since the three translators finished their translation in 1932 (Plămădeală 1981: 439-440). They could have used the critical edition of Swete (SWETE), first published in 1894. But SWETE contains the part of v. 3 related to animals.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, the particular elements that differentiate Hos 4 LXX from the Masoretic Text<sup>6</sup> are not present in B1936, which might suggest that the translation was done not after LXX, but after MT.

<sup>4</sup> Jurnal II, p. 189, ap. Plămădeală (1981: 442). In 1939, Nicodim Munteanu was chosen Patriarch of the Romanian Orthodox Church. Under his administration, a new edition of the Bible was published in 1944. In fact, only the text of NT was different from the text of B1936. The books that were translated in B1936 by Galaction and Radu are mentioned in the Introduction of B1944 (p. XXVII): Job, Proverbs, Isaiah, Daniel, The Minor Prophets, Judith, Baruch, Jeremiah, 3 Ezra, Wisdom, Sirach, Bel and the Dragon, The Song of the Three Young Men, 1-3 Maccabees.

3.2. Biblia Hebraica Kittel

As regards the Hebrew text, the translators of B1936 could have used the first two editions of the Hebrew Bible (BHK), edited by Rudolf Kittel, in 1906, respectively in 1913. Those reproduced the text of Ben Chaiim, also called Mikraot Gedolot – textus receptus from the rabbinic Bible, edited by Daniel Bomberg, in 1524. Hos 4:1-5 from Mikraot Gedolot is not different from the one in Codex Petrogradensis; v. 3 includes reference to the animals.<sup>7</sup>

But the suggestion of taking into account the entire v. 3 as a gloss or comment could have been taken by Vasile Radu from the critical apparatus of BHK (1913). Here one can identify the mentioning of “verse 3 nonn ad hab” (“versum tres nonnulli additum habent”), namely that v. 3 has been considered by some as being an addition (BHK 1913: 833).

3.3. Kautzsch’ Translation

The translators of the B1936 could have had access to an important source for the literature of that time: Die Heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments, translated by Emil Kautzsch. The work, first published in 1894, was in its fourth edition in 1923, being considered a work of reference at that time. It was accomplished by a group that included eminent biblical scholars from renowned universities (e.g., Berlin, Marburg, Ludwigsburg, Bonn, Leipzig, Königsberg, Bern, Münster, Breslau). In this edition, Hosea was translated by H. Guthe; Hos 4:3 is printed in smaller letters than the rest of the text:

In the critical apparatus, Guthe argues that v. 3 would be a later interpolation, as it interrupts the description of the apostasy, started in v. 1, by mentioning the sentence.

<sup>6</sup> V. 2: “Curse and lying [...] are over the country (ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς)”; v. 5: “[...] we likened your mother to the night (νυκτὶ ὁμοίωσα τὴν μητέρα σου).” Cf. Glenny (2013: 38-43; 87-101).

<sup>7</sup> בְּחַיַּת הַשָּׁמַיִם וּבְעוֹף הַשָּׁמַיִם וּבְחַיַּת הַבְּרָאָה וּבְעוֹף הַבְּרָאָה וּבְחַיַּת הַיָּם וּבְעוֹף הַיָּם וּבְחַיַּת הַיָּם וּבְעוֹף הַיָּם (‘‘with the beasts of the plain and the fowls of heaven; even the fish of the sea will perish’’).

This penalty is not formulated as a discourse of the Lord, as would be expected. Also, the idea that human beings are the source of suffering for the entire nature would belong to a later epoch (cf. Is 33:9; 24:3-6 (KAUTZSCH, 7 and note 7)).<sup>8</sup>

3.4. Sellin's Translation

The omission of only the second part of v. 3 appears in a work that could have been available to the translators of the Bible from 1936: Das Zwölfprophetenbuch, i.e. the Book of the Twelve Prophets, translated and explained by Ernst Sellin. Based on linguistic and stylistic reasons, Sellin was inclined to believe that parts of vv. 1-3 are later insertions or explanatory comments that influenced the regular meter of 4:1-10. In order to indicate insertions, Sellin rendered them with normal letters, while the body text is in italics (SELLIN: 38):<sup>9</sup>

Ihr Kinder Israel

Weil keine Treue und keine Liebe / Und keine Gotteserkenntnis im Lande ist.*

Samt den Tieren des Feldes und den Vögeln des Himmels und auch die Fische des Meeres werden dahingerafft.

In addition to removing v. 3ayb, one could not identify other elements that might suggest the influence of Sellin's work on the translators of B1936.

In conclusion, the lack of a part of v. 3 in B1936 is best explained as a choice of the translator, based on literary criticism reasons related to the text. We have not found evidence that Vasile Radu used Kautzsch and Sellin's works, as we do not know whether he knew German. But as professor at a Faculty of Theology, orientalist with studies in Paris, and translator from Arabic (Ștefănescu 1940: 716-718; Abrudan 2009), he must have been familiar with those works.

Surprisingly, the omission in the B1936, which was perpetuated in all Romanian synodal Bibles, does not appear in the translation of the Bible from 1938 (B1938), completed by the same Gala Galaction and Vasile Radu. The translation was made following the Hebrew text and the work of translation began before the printing of B1936 (Conța 2011: 196-201).

<sup>8</sup> Cf. also Jeremias (1983: 59, 62). Rudolph (1966: 102) finds this idea insufficiently supported by evidence. Most commentaries do not separate v. 3 from the rest of the text (Harper 1905; Deissler 1981; Stuart 1987; Ben Zvi 2005).

<sup>9</sup> Rudolph (1966: 102), though admits SELLIN'S argument, does not consider it crucial for the exclusion of v. 3.

Hos 4:3 (B1938)
 Pentru aceasta țara e în jale, iar cei ce locuiesc în ea sunt fără vlagă, chiar și dobitoacele câmpiei, chiar și păsările cerului, până și peștii mării pier și ei.

English translation
 For this the country is mourning, and those who dwell therein are flabby, even the beasts of the plain, even the birds of heaven, even the fish of the sea perish.

4. Verse 5: “Your Thummim” (B1936)

This variant, unusual among Romanian translations, is present only in B1936 and B1944. The edition from 1968 revised the v. 5 and replaced “your Thummim” with “your people.” If a haplography may be taken into account in the case of v. 3ayb-4 from B1936, in other words an inadvertent error of the translator, in the case of v. 5 such an explanation is excluded.

We did not encounter the reading “your Thummim” in any biblical translation. The first two editions of BHK (1906, 1913) mention no text witnesses for this variant. The critical apparatus of the 3rd edition of Biblia Hebraica mentions as hypothetical the reading “Your Thummim and your Urim will be silent,” with reference to Deut 33:8.<sup>10</sup> But as this edition of the Hebrew Bible appeared in 1937, it could not have been used for B1936.

Instead, translators could find other works of textual criticism on Hosea. K. Budde<sup>11</sup> have proposed a similar version, preferring to read “your Urim” (אִרְמִיָּהּ) instead of “your mother” (MT).

4.1. Kautzsch

As indicated above, Vasile Radu reproduced v. 3 partially, as Sellin actually did. However, in the case of v. 5b, Radu seems to have been influenced by the work of Kautzsch, which suggested the reading:

[...] und ich will eure Tummim vernichten!
 (“[...] and I will destroy your Thummim!”).

The translator considered the reading “your Thummim” more plausible than “your mother” (MT).<sup>12</sup> The variant proposed in KAUTZSCH and adopted by Radu belongs to the field of textual criticism.

The discussion of vv. 3 and 5 makes us believe that Vasile Radu turned out to be more than a translator. His intention seems to have been that of restoring a pre-canonical shape of the text, where the canonical seemed improbable/ doubtful or corrupt. The solutions adopted by Radu were based on critical works of some renowned scholars in the field of biblical research.

5. The Omission of v. 4 in SYN and B1936

SYN (English translation)	NRSV
1. Hear the word of the LORD, ye children of Israel; for the LORD has an indictment against the inhabitants of the earth.	1. Hear the word of the LORD, O people of Israel; for the LORD has an indictment against the inhabitants of the land. There is no faithfulness or loyalty, and no knowledge of God in the land.
2. Because there is no faith, love, or knowledge of God in the land.	2. Swearing, lying, and murder, and stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed.
3. False swearing, lying, murder, stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed.	3. Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish; together with the wild animals and the birds of the air, even the fish of the sea are perishing.
4. Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish.	4. Yet let no one contend, and let none accuse, for with you is my contention, O priest.
5. You stumble by day; the prophet shall also stumble with you by night, and I shall make your people perish.	5. You shall stumble by day; the prophet also shall stumble with you by night, and I will destroy your mother.

The absence of v. 4 from MT or LXX in the editions of the Romanian Synodal Bible was noticed by Pentiu (2001: 340). As already mentioned, it is an omission taken from B1936. As a result of that omission in SYN 2008, the question arises concerning the identity of the subject rendered as “you” in Hos 4:5:

Tu te poticnești ziua, iar noaptea se poticnește cu tine și profetul și voi face să piară poporul tău (SYN 2008).

(“You stumble by day; the prophet shall also stumble with you by night, and I shall make your people perish.”)

Does the pronoun “you” refer collectively to the “land and its people” mentioned in v. 4? It would be the only acceptable solution in the context of vv. 1-4, where, under different forms of address, the Israelites are hinted at (“sons of Israel”, v. 1; “the inhabitants of the land/ the country”, v. 2; “all”, v. 3). “You” should therefore be understood as a reference to the people.

But the end of v. 5 – “I will make your people perish” – makes the identification above (“you” = people) less plausible. The same pronoun (“you”) is described here as being a part of the people. It follows that the subject of v. 4 in SYN 2008 cannot be the people considered collectively, but an individual or a group within that people.

By omitting v. 4 (MT, LXX) and rendering “your mother” (MT, LXX) as “your people”, the speech in SYN 2008 loses its coherence and creates confusion in identifying text characters.

5.1. Possible Explanations for the Omission of v. 4 in B1936

What could determine Vasile Radu – if the omission of v. 4 is due to him – make such a decision?

(1) It could be an option of literary and textual criticism. The discussion on v. 3 supports this hypothesis.<sup>13</sup> But it would remain a unique solution in biblical theology, since no translation of the Bible omitted that verse and no researcher treated it as textual addition.

(2) An unintentional error of the translator is not impossible. But it is hard to believe that the omission of v. 4 in B1936 is due to the carelessness of the translator. Moreover, the division of v. 1 in vv. 1 and 2 indicates the intention to keep the same number of verses of the chapter after the omission of v. 4.

(3) It could be an ideological correction of an inconvenient text. In the Masoretic Text, v. 4 allows multiple renderings:

v. 4, MT	אִךְ אִישׁ אֶל-רֵבִב וְאֶל-יֹכַח אִישׁ וְעַמֻּד כַּמְרִיבֵי כַהֵן:
Possible translations	“But no one judges, no one accuses anyone; for your people are like those who contend with the priest.” “Yet let no one judge, nor accuse anyone; for your people are like those who contend with the priest.”

Some Bible versions render the text in this way,<sup>14</sup> but most modern scholars consider the Masoretic Text as being corrupt in v. 4. Ancient versions are not helpful in this case, as they had probably relied on an already corrupted Hebrew text.

v. 4, LXX	ὅπως μηδεις μητε δικάζηται μητε ἐλέγχη μεδεις ὁ δὲ λαός μου ὡς ἀντιλεγόμενος ἱερεὺς
	“So much so that no one sits in judgement, or reproves; but my people are as an impeached priest.”
v. 4, VUL	Verumtamen unusquisque non iudicet et non arguatur vir populus enim tuus sicut hii qui contradicunt sacerdoti
	“But yet let not any man judge: and let not a man be rebuked: for thy people are as they that contradict the priest.” <sup>15</sup>

Typically, modern translations of Hosea make use of a textual conjecture in v. 4:<sup>16</sup> (a) the word עַמֻּד (“your people”) becomes, through a different vocalization, עַמֻּמ (“with you”); (b) the first two letters of כְּמַרְיָבִי (“those who contend”) are removed and the vocalization is changed – רִיבִי (“my contention”).

<sup>14</sup> Cf. KJV: “Yet let no man strive, nor reprove another: for thy people are as they that strive with the priest.”

v. 4 (conjecture)	אֵךְ אִישׁ אֶל־רֵיב וְאֶל־יֹזֵכָה אִישׁ וְעִמָּךְ רִיבִי כִהְיֶן:
Possible translations	“But let no one judge, let no one accuse; For with you is my contention, O priest.” “But no one should be judged, no one should be accused; For with you is my contention, O priest.”

This reading indicates that the character to which the text makes reference, starting with v. 4, is the priest and not the people.<sup>17</sup> It is not a certain priest, as in Amos 7, or unworthy representatives of the clergy of Israel.<sup>18</sup> Even if initially vv. 4-6 could have been an oracle against a certain priest (Wolff 1961: 94), in its current form Hos 4:4-10 makes reference to the entire clergy (Jeremias 1983: 66). It accuses the priest in the generic sense, as a representative of the priestly class, which includes past generations (“your mother”, v. 5), as well as present and future ones (“your sons”, v. 6) (Jeremias 1983: 66).

The fault of priesthood would have been that of neglecting their mission: to help people reach the knowledge of their God. Since priests have denied knowledge of God (v. 6), it is understandable that people are deprived of this knowledge (vv. 1-6). The fault of priesthood is not just the failure of their mission. In vv. 7-10 priests are accused of perverting their ministry, in order to gain material profits: people are encouraged to increase cultic activities and thereby increase the revenue of the clergy. It is therefore no surprise for anyone that the people practice a cult that Hosea defines as “whoredom” (vv. 11-15).

Anticlerical prophetic speech in Hos 4 may disturb a reader who does not know the historical context in which it appeared. Some Romanian Orthodox priests, as well as some contemporary cantors use liturgical variants that seem more “Orthodox”, though these are neither supported by printed editions of liturgical books, nor faithful to the biblical text: they conclude Simeon’s song Nunc dimittis with “glory to thy faithful people” (instead of “glory to thy people Israel”, Lk 2:32); in the Parable of the Good Samaritan, they mention that “a priest of the old law” passed by the injured man, carelessly (instead of “a priest”, Lk 10:31).

<sup>17</sup> Ben Zvi (2005: 103) considers that “you” in v. 4 can refer both to the priests and to Israel: “Surely, the text speaks of monarchic Israel, of priests and other Israelites long dead, but it speaks also about (trans-temporal) Israel [...]”

Given the anti-Judaic character of these variants, it is very probable that they emerged in the decades before the World War II.

Could one argue that the translator Vasile Radu has resorted to such an intervention in Hos 4:4? It is quite improbable, since v. 4 appears in its complete form in B1938:

B1938: 861	English Translation
Dar nimeni să nu pornească certare și nimeni să nu mustre pe celălalt, ci împotriva ta, preote, îndrept certarea mea.	But one should not start scolding and no one should reprove each other, but against you, priest, I direct my scolding.

(4) Therefore, the hypothesis of a technical flaw, caused by a difficult text, appears to me as the most plausible. Perhaps the translator noted the existence of textual variants at v. 4 and passed on to the next verse, with the intention of returning to it later, but he never did so. Instead, in B1938, the same translator rendered v. 4 after the variant proposed by Guthe<sup>19</sup> or the critical apparatus of BHK (1937),<sup>20</sup> as most modern Bible translations do.

The last hypothesis may be taken into account only in the case of an interpreter who approaches the translation activity with great responsibility and is aware of the difficulties posed by the verse referred to above. However, this is exactly Vasile Radu's profile: a thorough theologian, scholar, whose approach of the biblical text was scientific. Radu did not limit his activity to the mere translation of source texts. He also explored scientific works about sources and adopted decisions based on his research. At least he seems to have worked in this way when translating Hos 4:3 (5).

Our analysis on the biblical text from Hosea shows that sometimes scholars can be wrong. In the case of B1936, not the scholarly principles, but rather the adopted solutions were wrong. A review of the text of Hos 4 in the actual Romanian Synodal Bible is therefore necessary.
