

SOME NAMES OF LOCALITIES IN THE COUNTY OF CONSTANȚA

Dumitru CARABAȘ
“Ovidius” University of Constanța

Abstract

Dobrogean toponymy carries the traces of the history of this territory. Thus, we find doublets of village names, we have the old name, usually of Turkish-Tatar origin, from the Ottoman Empire period, and besides this one, we also find the official name of the locality. The richness of Dobrogean toponymy delights us and explains the cohabitation of so many ethnic minorities in this space blessed by God. The Turks and Tatars, as old inhabitants of this province, gave the initial names, which were also taken over by the Aromanians, settled here at the beginning of the 20th century.

Key-words: toponymy, borrowings, Turkish-Tatar, Dobrogea, Constanța

Résumé

La toponymie de Dobrogea, porte les traces de l'histoire de ce territoire. Ainsi, on retrouve les noms de localités doublés, leur ancien nom, d'habitude d'origine turco-tatare, de la période de l'Empire ottomane, étant doublé par le nom officiel, actuel, de la respective localité. La richesse de la toponymie de Dobrogea nous ravit et explique le mode de cohabitation de tant de minorités ethnique dans cet espace béni de Dieu. Les Turques et les Tatares, anciens habitants de cette province, ont donné des noms qui ont également été repris par les Aroumains colonisés ici au début du XX^e siècle.

Mots-clés: toponymie, emprunts, turco-tatare, Dobrogea, Constanța

1. Introduction

Dobrogea is a special territory not only for Romania, but for the whole Europe, as the entrance gate of both Indo-European populations and all other migratory populations that knocked at the gates of the old continent.

In the ancient period, starting with the 8th-7th centuries BC, the well-known Greek colonies on the shores of Pontus Euxinus were established here and they later became part of the Roman Empire, just to remain in the sphere of influence of the Byzantine Empire.

During the medieval period, for more than four and a half centuries (1418-1878), this territory was part of the Ottoman Empire.

What I wanted to emphasize above is the fact that Dobrogea was and has remained a model of interethnic and interconfessional cohabitation over the years, and the existence, until the beginning of the 19th century, of the Metropolitan churches of Proilavia and Silistra, under Ottoman rule, demonstrates it.

Another important aspect of the reality of so many ethnicities' cohabitation in the space between the Danube and the Black Sea is the toponymy of these places, and a few names of some villages here will be dealt with in this article.

The information underlying the material presented here was collected during the doctoral studies in the field of Theology, finalized by defending the thesis Churches built in the County of Constanța between 1878 and 1923, in 2018, under the coordination of Priest Prof. Nechita Runcan, PhD, when I had the opportunity to revisit some of the Dobrogea villages.

From the very beginning I have to make the following statement: Dobrogean toponymy is, in many cases, doubled, in the sense that we find both the current official name of the localities in the reference area, and the old name, usually of Turkish-Tatar origin. This double Dobrogean toponymy has an interesting feature in the sense that the old name is preserved by both the Turkish-Tatar communities, which is easy to understand, and by the Aromanian communities.

The fact that the Aromanians took over and preserved the archaic toponym, usually of Turkish-Tatar origin, is due, we believe, to the following factors: the multilingualism of this population; the Aromanians lived under Ottoman rule for a long time, as settlers of the Balkan Peninsula, being thus accustomed to the Turkish-Tatar terms in the Empire; their colonization on the territory of Romania took place between 1925 and 1935 in Cadrilater, and in 1940 the populations were exchanged, the Aromanians being relocated again in the counties of Tulcea and Constanța. The first period coincides with the first changes of the names of localities in Dobrogea, 1926, so that the Aromanians knew the old toponymy that had not yet been altered, being passed on to the coming generations.

2. Several toponyms of Constanța preserved from the Ottoman period

Adamclisi – *the Church of Adam*¹;

Anadalochioi – the village of the Anadoleni, where Dobrogean Germans lived², at present a district in the municipality of Constanța.

Arsa, near Mangalia – *Capucci*³;

Băneasa – Parachioi “the village with much money”⁴;

Bărăganu – *Coman-Facă*⁵;

Bugeag – Bugeag;

Canlia – Canli-Derea “red blood brook”, because after a fight between the Turks and the Russians the waters of the brook were reddened with blood⁶;

Castelu – formerly a Tatar village, a fact proved by the two Tatar cemeteries whose traces were still visible in 1967 and the two mounds of ashes, according to the Tatar custom to put the ashes in a certain place. The old name of the village was *Chiostel*⁷.

Crucea – *Satsichioi*²².

Cuza Vodă – Decuzel, Docuzol, Dokuz Oğul, translated as 9 children, 9 brothers, according to the number of children of the rich Tatar in this village, Mimid Ali²³.

Deleni – the old name of the locality was Enigea, which means “New village”, a name changed in 1931, with the current name showing the location of the village between the hills²⁴.

Dorobanţu – Beleru, after the name of a pasha, *Bilaller*²⁵.

Dumbrăveni – *Hairam-Chioi*²⁶.

Dunărea – Boazgic, Boascic, founded by the Tatars in the 15th century, called Boazgic, which means “a small swampy dead end” from boaz – swampy + -gic Turkish diminutive suffix. The name Boazgic or Boascic resisted until 1927, when it was changed into the current name²⁷.

Dunăreni – Iurt, Mârleanu, before the location was in Turkish Iurt in Turkish, which means “abandoned”, 1 km east of the present village.²⁸

Esechioi – *Eschioi*²⁹.

Fântânele – was called Ienan Cişme or Inancişmea which means “fresh water”, a name justified by the springs captured in the water pump located in the northern part of the village, which led, through an aqueduct in stone, drinking water to the fortress of Histria³⁰.

Gălbiori – was called Saragea until 1925, which means “yellow” in Turkish³¹.

Gura Dobrogei – founded around 1885 by the settlement of some Romanians from Brăila near a former Turkish locality called Cavargic, whose population emigrated after the 1877 Independence War³².

Haţeg – the old name of the village was Arabagi, which means “carters”, and the other village belonging to Pietreni, namely Mulciova, was called Abrud, which indicates that they were inhabited before by an old Thraco-Dacian population³³, when the Turks and Tatars came, from whom Muslim cemeteries remained³⁴.

Independența – Bairamedede, the locality is old and inhabited from its very beginning by Tatars³⁵.

Ion Corvin – *Cuzgun*³⁶.

Istria – *Caranusuf*³⁷.

Izvoarele – *Pîrjoaia*³⁸.

Izvorul Mare – was inhabited, until 1877, mostly by Tatars, originating from Crimea, the locality being named Mamut Cuius, the residence of a bey that owned all the villages from the Danube to the Black Sea. Yet, such names as Bucu, Borcea, Frecea, and Popa make us believe that Romanian families also lived here during this period³⁹.

Limanu – Caracicula sau Caracicola which means “black peaks”, probably from the nearby elm forest, which was cleared by the first Romanian settlers here. Previously, there had been several families of Bulgarians growing cattle and sheep, followed by several families of Germans, who retired to Albești where other Germans lived. Later, the name was changed into Limanu, from the fact that the locality is situated near Lake Mangalia⁴⁰.

Lipnița – a local tradition according to which around 1820-1821 there was a secular forest with many lime trees here, which attracted some Adrianople inhabitants, the Ivanof brothers, who fled because of the frequent wars between the Russians and the Turks and settled in the region of Silistra. Another legend links the name of the village with a kind of bitter bur that the Bulgarians called “lipan”, meaning “sticky, clinging”⁴¹.

Lumina – Valea Neagra, Cogealia, was called Cogealia, which means “Ali the Great”, after the name of a Tatar chief that had emigrated from Lake Baikal, after the Russian-Turkish war, and had settled here in 1787. The Tatars withdrew to Bulgaria during the War of 1877, the settlement being populated with Germans brought from Bessarabia and Transnistria, after which Transylvanian shepherds settled here⁴².

Măgura – the comune of Docuzaci or Dokuz Ağaç – “nine trees” (Măgura)⁴³.

³³ Abrud is an oikonym of native origin. See ILR II, p. 359-361; Vasile Frățilă, Studii de toponimie, p. 42.

Medgidia – Medgidia.

Mereni – the old name of the locality, when it was inhabited only by Tatars, was Inge Mahale or Enge Mahale, meaning “sharp or prolonged slum”, because the village was located on a valley crossing it from south to east⁴⁴.

Mihai Viteazu – Sariurt, which means “yellow uncultivated land”, because there were many yellow everlasting flowers growing in the area. The name Mihai Viteazu/ ‘Michael the Brave’ was given in 1918⁴⁵.

Mihail Kogălniceanu – Cara Murat, after the name of a commander of the Turkish troops that stationed here before 1877⁴⁶.

Miorița – Cadi-Câșla (Tk. Kadi Kișla), since 1925 called Bălăceanu, the commune of Saraiu, and in 1964 it receives the name Miorița, by Decree 799/1964⁴⁷.

Mircea Vodă – the old name was Celibichioi which is translated from Turkish as celibi – “elegant, beautiful, pretty” and chioi – “village”⁴⁸.

Mircești – Demircea, being inhabited until 1913 only by Bulgarians, who went back to Bulgaria⁴⁹.

Mireasa – Ghelengic, was inhabited in 1878 by 400 Tatar families and 4 families of shepherds coming from Transylvania, and in 1886 there were colonists coming from the former counties of Râmnicu Sărat and Brăila, the Tatars leaving all for the Orient in 1879⁵⁰.

Movila Verde – was formerly called Cazil Murat, ie “Murat the Red”, being inhabited only by Tatars until the spring of 1898, when the first Romanians came here⁵¹.

Murfatlar – Murfatlar, Basarabi, the name of the settlement would come from two Turkish brothers Mîrzi or Mîrvan and means “the village of the two brothers”⁵², inhabited by Turks until 1877.

Negrești – *Carabacu*⁵³.

Negru Vodă – Cara Omer, which means “Omer the Dark”, because until the arrival of the first Romanians here the settlement was inhabited only by Tatars. And this Omer seems to have been, according to a legend written by the church historian, the commander of the Ottoman armies who was defeated at Cuciuc-Cainargi by Mircea the Elder⁵⁴.

Negureni – Cuarnîc or Cararlâc, which in Turkish is translated as “bee garden”, probably from the old occupation of former locals, a name changed into Caranîc – “darkness” and then, after 1877, into Caralnîc, Caranlîk – “gloom”. In 1929 the name is changed again into Negureni⁵⁵.

Nicolae Bălcescu – Zanechici, Carol I, the first Romanian families came to the village in 1880, from the regions of Brăila and Buzău, at that time the village was called Zanechici and was inhabited by 50-60 Tatar families, and the mayor was Bechir Aga. Later, the name was changed into Carol I⁵⁶.

Nuntași – *Duingi*⁵⁷.

Olteni – Demircea, Demirci, the locality was founded in 1894 following the arrival of 70 families from Oltenia and Dolj, in a settlement of Tatars, Demircea, Demirci, which is translated as “the man who bends the iron”, after the name of the first founder, the blacksmith Demir⁵⁸.

Osmancea – *Osmancea*⁵⁹.

Ostrov – the current location of the village was called Alunețul in ancient times, or in Turkish Fîndîc, after the young forest of hazelnut trees that covered it, which was grubbed up⁶⁰.

Ovidiu – Canara meaning “stone” in Turkish, which was named Ovidiu in 1930⁶¹; the villages of Cogelia, Palazu Mare and Cocoșu, Horoslar in Turkish (the present village Poiana by decree 799 of 11 December 1964) also belonged to the Canara parish until 1940.

Pantelimon – Ceatal Ormen, Pantelimonu de Sus, located west of the ancient Ulmetum Roman fortress⁶².

Pădureni – *Nastradin*⁶³.

Pecineaga – *Gherengic*⁶⁴.

Peștera – near Mamut Cuius, the locality was founded in 1893 by putting in possession of arable land – 25 ha – a number of 150 Romanian families coming from Brăila and Ialomița, in a place called Bes-Dera, which is translated as “Five Valleys”, where five valleys gather rain water, the Romanians called it Peștera ('the cave') from the very beginning⁶⁵.

Petroșani – Chioseler, the first Romanians came here around 1880 from Oltenia and Transylvania, being put in possession of 25 ha of arable land. They found a population of Tatars who left the settlement around 1922, from whom the old Muslim cemeteries on the outskirts were preserved⁶⁶.

Pietreni – Cocargea, which means “the flavoured one”, seemingly from a plant with a strong wild thyme scent, much appreciated by hive owners⁶⁷.

Plopeni – Cavaclar, was first inhabited by Turks, being divided into two parts, Cavaçlar and Mangaciâ, hence the old name of Cvaclar (Kavaklar from kawlak – poplar tree)⁶⁸.

Poiana – Horoslar, the name was changed by Decree 799 of 11 December 1964⁶⁹.

Rariștea – Bazarghian, the old name of the locality was Bazarghian, meaning “tradesman” after a Turk who lived in the village in 1967⁷⁰.

Rasova – has been inhabited by Romanians since ancient times, this is where the shepherds came with their sheep, the name coming from rahat suhut meaning “good pasture”, cf. Bg. rěsa “catkins”, to which Iorgu Iordan relates the toponym *Rasova*⁷¹. After the Independence War, some of the veterans received land here, forming the veterans' outskirts. The locality seems to have been the residence of the poet Macedonski who held, after 1879, certain positions in the Romanian administration. A proof of the existence of the Romanians in this area is also the recording an Orthodox church built in 1848 by the Romanian community here, with the help of Said Pasha, who was entrusted with the administration of Dobrogea. Ion Ionescu de la Brad appreciates his administration, emphasizing the righteousness and mercy shown to the people. Understanding that a better world is created through school and faith, Said Pasha paid great attention to the establishment of mosques and schools for the Muslim population, but also to the construction of churches, including the cult site of Rasova.⁷²

Râmnicu de Jos – the old name of the village was Irimlic, being inhabited until the 1877 Independence War only by Turkish population⁷³.

Runcu – was inhabited until 1877 by Turks and was called Tersichioi – “a village of tailors”⁷⁴.

Saligny – Azizia, in the oldest times the village was inhabited by Cherkessians, who withdrew in 1877, being called Azizia at that time, after the name of a Turk, Azis Bey, the name being changed in 1918⁷⁵.

Saraiu – Eni-Serai and Eschis-Serai, the village of Saraiu was founded by the Turks in 1820, on the valley of the brook with the same name. There were two villages in ancient times, Eni-Serai and Eschis-Sarai, the latter being destroyed in 1828. In 1877 the Romanian settlers came here, veterans from Ialomița, Brăila, Brașov, and Făgăraș, and the Turks left all⁷⁶.

Săcele – Peletlia, until 1877, inhabited only by Turks, the name meaning “oak” and was changed in 1925 at the request of the Romanian shepherds from Transylvania, near Brașov, from Săcele⁷⁷.

Seimenii Mari, Seimenii Mici – the name of the village of Seimeni is old, due, according to some local legends, to the incursion of a Wallachian army which found here a population that spoke the same language, had the same faith and the same customs, therefore they called them semeni, either from the name of the pedestrian army at the time of Matei Basarab, seimenk respectively, which caused trouble both to the ruler and to his successor, Constantin Șerban Basarab⁷⁸.

Siliștea – Taspunar, which is translated as “the stone fountain”, according to a local legend stating that a rich Tatar hid his gold in it and closed it⁷⁹. The toponym Săliște as etymon Bg. selište meaning “the ruins or settlement of a former village”⁸⁰.

Sinoe – Casapchioi, until 1932, the village was founded around 1820 by some Turks, cattle breeders, butchers, hence the name of the village casap-chioi *butchers*⁸¹.

Strunga – *Cășlea, Kișla*⁸².

Stupina – *Ercheseș*⁸³.

Șipotele – Ghiolpunar, from the Turkish *Gölpinar*⁸⁴.

Târgușoru – before 1877 there were bazaars or fairs organized in this village several times a year, hence the name Pazarlik or Pazarlia, meaning “fair”. Until 1878, when the first Romanians arrive here, the village was inhabited by Tatars originating from Crimea, therefore the first mayor under Romanian administration was the Tatar Hagi Ali Murat 1879-1887⁸⁵.

Techirghiol – the town was an ancient Turkish settlement, where Transylvanian

Romanians were colonized after the Independence War of 1877, but especially after 1922, when the massive colonization with ploughmen from all regions of the country, especially from Bucharest, Oltenia and Ageș, began⁸⁶.

Topalu – Topalu of Turkish origin, meaning “lame”, and nearby there is a valley called “the valley of the Tatar”⁸⁷.

Topraisar – Topraisar of Turkish-Arab origin either from toprak-isar which can be translated as “fortress” or “fortress made of earth”, or from toprak-sarî meaning “good, fertile yellow soil”. Besides, around the commune, one may notice ancient vestiges of a fortified settlement with an edge of land and 4 old Turkish cemeteries in the north of the locality⁸⁸.

Tortomanu – Tortomanu, Tatar etymology, from the inhabitants before 1877, meaning “the bald hill”, in the sense of droughty, a name derived from the hill in the south of the village, used only for pasture and which, in the past, was dry in the summer⁸⁹.

Tudor Vladimirescu – *Regep Cuius*⁹⁰.

Tufani – Cara-Aci sau *Șarapcea-Cara-Aci*⁹¹.

Țepeș Vodă – Chiorcișmea, founded by Tatars originating from Russia, Crimea and Ackerman (Bugeac or Ismail) was Chiorcișme, translated as “the dry water pump”, and there was a local legend according to which the son of a local mullah would have drowned in the lake formed from that spring, the mullah had stopped the spring with wool and earth, and it dried up⁹².

Valea Țapului – *Teche-Deres*⁹³.

Viile – *Beilic*⁹⁴.

Vișoara – Caceamac, was named Kaçamak (Caciamac, Caceamac) before 1926, according to the Turkish toponymy, before 1898 there were some Romanian families of shepherds, at the old Caceamac, 5 km west of the present locality⁹⁵.

Viroaga – old Tatar hamlet, Calfachioi, which means “the stone breaker man”, due to the limestone around⁹⁶.

Vlahi – *Vlah-kioi*⁹⁷. The toponym Vlahi is related to the old Slavic vlahŭ “shepherd, Romanian”⁹⁸.

Vulturu – Cartalu, the Turkish Kartal, meaning “eagle”⁹⁹.

Zorile – in ancient times, bearing the name Kerim Kuis, translated as “Kerim’s dump”, seemingly after the name of a Turk who settled here with the cattle, the entire village being populated with Turks before 1877. The name refers to the valley crossing the village on the northeastern direction that comes from the Danube, from Wallachians and up to Mangalia, to the seaside¹⁰⁰.

3. Conclusions

Dobrogean toponymy preserves the traces of the history of this land. Thus, we encounter an interesting phenomenon, namely the existence of doublets of locality names by keeping in the people’s mind the old names before 1877, and by using them in parallel, more than a century later, with the official ones, modified over time, in various political and social contexts.

Following on-the-spot observations, we can assume that this doublet has been preserved mainly due to the continuity of the Turkish-Tatar population in this area, to which most of the old names belong, as well as to the Aromanian population, settled here at the beginning of the last century, which is still using the toponyms borrowed at that time in the communication within the community today.

Interestingly, along with the Turks and Tatars, the Aromanians, although settled here less than a century ago, also use the old names of the localities. This can be explained by both the multilingualism of the Aromanians and their habit of living together with the Turkish-Tatar populations south of the Danube in their native localities, where they came from to Dobrogea.

Here, this part of the country shows once again the richness of the names of the localities in Dobrogea, namely in Constanța county. We want to emphasize the multitude of names for the same place, locality, which the coexistence of different populations brings, not only in anthroponymy, as we showed in our previous articles, but also in toponymy.
