

THE TRANSLATION OF “HIGH PRIEST” IN THE SLAVO-ROMANIAN TETRAEVANGELION OF SIBIU. DOES IT REVEAL A WESTERN INFLUENCE?*

Giuseppe STABILE

Università degli Studi di Napoli “L’Orientale”

gstabile@unior.it

Rezumat Este interesant de observat că textul român din Tetraevanghelul bilingv de la Sibiu transpune NT-Gr. ἀρχιερεύς ‘mare preot’ prin patru sau cinci traduceri diferite. O atare hiper-traducere nu se găsește în niciuna dintre versiunile Evangheliei după Matei virtual accessible unui traducător și/sau revizor aflat în spațiul carpato-dunărean, mai probabil în Banat, Sud-Estul Transilvaniei sau Moldova, în prima jumătate a veacului al XVI-lea. Articolul de față își propune să compare această particularitate a textului românesc din Tetraevanghel nu numai cu tradiția biblică (în special mateiană), dar și cu toate tradițiile *vulgar*e susceptibile de a-i fi influențat traducerea și revizuirea, fără să uite „uzul profan” al slavonei. Obiectivul autorului este acela de a arunca o lumină nouă asupra unor rexatae quastiones, ca de pildă posibila matrice eterodoxă fie a traducerii, fie a editării textului, precum și existența, în textul însuși, a unei stratificări redacționale marcate de influențe diferite în planul lingvistic și confesional.

Cuvinte cheie: arhiereu, Evanghelie, Sibiu, Reforma luterană, Transilvania, Moldova, Banat, slavonă, Filip Maler.

1. Introduction

The Slavo-Romanian Tetraevangelion of Sibiu (SRT) was the last and most important book to be printed in Cyrillic in the Saxon city between 1551 and 1552-53.¹ It is believed that the volume was printed by Filip Maler “the Moldavian” who was actually almost certainly a Saxon from Moldavia. In 1544, he had already used the local printing press to publish a Romanian Catechism, which has been lost, and a Slavonic Tetraevangelion (STS) in 1546; the former, at least, had been commissioned by the local Stadtrichter.² Note that the Slavonic Tetraevangelion of Sibiu was a faithful reprint of the editio princeps of the Palaeoslavonic Four Gospels Book (Trg), printed at Târgoviște in 1512 by the Serbian Hieromonk Makarije (see Demény 1971: 90). It is widely believed that the Saxon authorities of Sibiu funded a bilingual edition of the Tetraevangelion since, having recently embraced Lutheran Reform, they wanted to spread knowledge of it among the Romanians of Transylvania through the local Orthodox clergy.³

* The present article is the English version, revised and extended, of “Tra Slavonismo e Riforma: la traduzione di sommo sacerdote nel Tetraevangelo slavo-rumeno di Sibiu”, appeared in România Orientală 29 (2016), 143-157; English text by Colum Fordham and Giuseppe Stabile.

¹ It is the oldest Biblical text in Slavonic and Romanian, the earliest printed book in the two languages with a parallel text (Mihăilă 1972: 241-242). Two fragments of it have survived, both of the Gospel of Matthew and still waiting for a critical edition: one fragment, the longer of the two (ff. 1^r-117^v, Mt 3:17-27:55), kept at the Saltykov-Čedrin National Library in St Petersburg (Demény 1971: 22-98), the other shorter one (ff. 36^v-37^r, Mt 12:12-28), kept in the Orthodox Church of Oiejdea, in the province of Alba Iulia, where it was discovered in 1978 (Márza 1978: 173-175). As regards the dating of SRT, see the most recent studies: Gheție/ Mares (1985: 337), Demény (1986: 303), Mares (1990: 238-239).

2. An Early Lutheran Four Gospels Book?

The unprecedented publication of the Tetraevangelion in the vernacular, only a few years after the printed edition of the Catechism, fitted in perfectly with the quintessential forms of Lutheran propaganda. A more unusual feature was the parallel Slavonic text which reflects the attempt to reach the Romanian clergy for whom the linguistic communion with Orthodox Slavs remained as important as the spiritual one, a cornerstone of Orthodoxy. In the mid-16th century, Slavonic was still the main liturgical language throughout the Romanian area, including Transylvania and Banat but the need to translate it or supplement it with Romanian was becoming increasingly apparent, especially among the Transylvanian secular clergy (Mihăilă 1972: 244).

The fact that the religious texts printed at Sibiu-Hermannstadt by Filip Maler, between 1544 and 1551-53, maintained a stronger Lutheran influence than the texts printed at Brașov-Kronstadt by the Deacon Coresi between 1560 and 1567, seems to be confirmed by the STS: in the Prădistorie of the Gospel of St John by Teophylact of Ohrid, the Sibian editors eliminated the sentences that described the Evangelist as the defender of Orthodoxy against heresies or denied the importance “of the word and knowledge inherent in language” (i.e., the authority of Holy Scripture as the witness of Revelation, on whose importance for Luther see Bainton 1952: 44-45).⁴ Moreover, a Hungarian document dating to 1752 seems to refer to the same Filip, defining him as the “apostle” of the Reform among the Vlachs (“Filep Oláh Apostol Oláhul irt könyve az oláhok reformatiós-jára”, see Jakó 1977 [1970]: 121).⁵

² Between 1521 and 1554, a Ma(gi)ster Philip is recorded by the Konsularrechnungen as working in Sibiu on behalf of the city, not just as a typographer but also as an engraver-illustrator (cf. Moler/Pictor), scribe-translator for Romanian (cf. scriba/interpres) and envoy (see Binder/ Hutmánn 1968: 150-156, 165 and 170-174). His origins are uncertain but at least three things suggest that he was a Saxon from Moldavia: 1. he definitely knew at least German (and Slavonic) as well as Romanian; 2. the Romanian text of SRT has various Saxon (German) traits; 3. Philip apparently referred to himself as Filip' Moldověnīn' Филипъ Молдовѣнинъ in the colophon of STS (see Gheție 1966: 77, Mares 1967: 72 and 1968: 86).

³ In fact, the Hungarian Calvinist authorities were mainly responsible for the attempt to introduce, from the second half of the 16th century onwards, the use of Romanian as a liturgical and pastoral language (though with negative results, at least initially). Cf. Alzati (2010: 188-189).

An equally significant aspect is the fact that the Romanian text of the SRT displays analogies with Luther’s German text, ascribable to translation or revision prior to printing within the context of the Saxon-Lutheran press, or to both (cf. Petrovici 1971: 10-14, Mareş 2005 [1982]: 267).

However, the most convincing evidence for the Lutheran character of the SRT comes once again from the cultural context in which the bilingual text was written and printed: 1. It is thanks to Protestant propaganda that Sibiu became, together with nearby Braşov, the centre of a significant output of printed volumes (until the 17th century, the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia depended on Transylvania for the printing of books in Romanian, cf. Demény 1973: 104, Deletant 1975: 168); 2. In the eyes of the Orthodox authorities of the Principalities, the translation of sacred texts in Romanian was suspected – with good reason – to be a means of propagating heresy but, above all, it clashed with the Orthodox ecclesiastical tradition, still formally based on Church Slavonic (Gheție 1974: 88-92).

The main redactional features in the Romanian text of the SRT refer to a Saxon Lutheran context, and can be localised in Banat-Hunedoara, Moldavia and southern Transylvania (Gheție/ Mareş 1985: 334). The first evidence for Lutheran propaganda aimed at swaying Orthodox Romanians in Banat-Hunedoara (Binder 1971: 273-275) dates to 1526 while a Romanian translation of the New Testament dating to 1532 was possibly done in Moldavia (by “quidam doctor ex Walachia”, who even brought it to Wittenberg to print, cf. Papacostea 1958: 62-63, Rosetti 1958: 20-22).

According to a classic hypothesis, that dates back to the end of the 19th century, the Romanian text of the SRT would have been translated from the same parallel Slavonic text, or a related/similar text (see Bogdan 1891: 36 but cf. Petrovici 1971: 10, 14).

Only two translations contained in the Romanian text of the SRT were considered heretical: duhovnic for the Ch. Sl. Фарисеј farisej (cf. Gr. φαρισαῖος) and mitropolit, piscup or vlădică for the Ch. Sl. αρχιερεῖ arbierj (cf. Gr. ἀρχιερεύς). The heretical aspect of these two translations lays in an allusive analogy made between the Orthodox clergy and the Pharisees and the High Priests, condemned by the Christ and/or implicated in His crucifixion (cf. Mareş 1967: 72, Demény 1971: 98 and Bodogae 1972: 86, 88).

⁴ Teophylact’s preface (PG¹²³: 1133-1135) was faithfully reproduced by Makarije (Trg: ff. 213^v₅₋₈, 214^v₁₉-214^v₁, cf. STS: p. 423-426) and Coresi (CST [1562]: ff. 159^v₁₄₋₁₉, 159^v₁₋₆). Noticed for the first time by Demény (see Demény-Simonescu 1965: 11), these adjustments have more recently turned out to be wider: At least two passages have been omitted and replaced with others from Teophylact’s preface to the Gospel of Mark (see Stabile 2019: 64-65). However, it’s strongly plausible that the STS was edited and printed in a Lutheran milieu.

⁵ Jakó claimed that the book “written” by Filip (“írt könyve”) is the lost Romanian Catechism (ibid.: 121-127).

3. The Translation of “High Priest” in the Slavo-Romanian Tetraevangelion

This article focuses on the translation of high priest, rendered in the Slavonic text simply as αρχιερεῖ (cf. Miklosich: 8), which, in the parallel Romanian text, corresponds to as many as four or five terms which vary but are unlikely to have been randomly chosen: 1. The singular, which always refers to Caiaphas, is translated six times as mitropolit ‘archbishop, metropolitan’ and twice as piscup ‘bishop’; 2. The plural, which refers to the priestly caste, is translated six times as vlădici ‘(arch-) bishops, governors’, three times as piscupi and three times as preuți (cei [mai]) mari.

These correspondences are virtually heretical due to their distribution in the Romanian text of the SRT, mainly located, in the Gospel of Matthew, from the plot against Jesus to the Passion, including Judas’ betrayal (Mt 26:3-27:41) and with one exception in which even Christ questions the very authority of the priests (Mt 21:23).⁶ In the rest of the Gospel (Mt 20:18; 21:15 and 21:45), the plural high priests is translated with the more general term preuți (cei / mai) mari literally ‘great priests’ (cf. Rom. preut/preot < Vulg.-Lat. prebutū [presbyter]* ‘priest’,⁷ corresponding, in the parallel Slavonic text, to ἱερεῖ ierej and εὐλιψενικτὸν svęstenikъ).

Coresi’s Romanian translation of the Tetraevangelion seems to have displayed greater caution in these lexical correspondences. Neither in Coresi’s Romanian Tetraevangelion (1560-61, CRT) nor in the Tetraevangelion by Radu de la Măniceşti, otherwise known as the Erangheliar de la Londra (The London Gospel [1574], LRT), are Orthodox metropolitans or bishops equated with high priests blamed as Christicides: întăiul preot ‘first priest’ and (mai) mare preot ‘great priest’ never alternate with mitropolit and piscup and only twice with vlădică.⁸

⁶ A brief discussion of the issue is to be found in Mareş (2005: 267, note 29).

⁷ Old Rom. preut (cf. Dalm. prat/pretro, Alb. prift, Irom prevtu, Arom. preftu [Popînceanu 1964: 200, Mihăescu 1993: 41, 298]), well attested from the 16th century, left significant traces already in Slavo-Romanian sources from the early 15th (DERS: 193, DLR^{8.4}: 1320).

⁸ By indicating SRT, CRT and LRT with I, II and III, the translations întăi/mare preut, piscup, vlădică and mitropolit with A, B, C, D for high priest/-s and the singular and plural of each one with 1 and 2 as a subscript, the framework of the respective occurrences in the three Romanian Tetraevangelia is as follows: Mt 20:18 I-II A₂; 21:15 I-II A₂; 21:23 I C₂, II A₂; 21:45 I-II A₂; 26:3 I B₂₋₁, II A₂₋₁ (2 occ.); 26:14 I B₁, II A₁; 26:47 I B₂, II A₂; 26:51 I B₁, II A₁; 26:57 I D₁, II A₁; 26:58 I D₁, II C₁; 26:59 I D₁, II A+C₁; 26:62 I D₁, II A₁; 26:63 I D₁,

It is true that Caiaphas and the high priests may have been represented in the Romanian text of the SRT as a metropolitan among his bishops with the sole intention of bringing St Matthew's Gospel closer to an Orthodox context. However, besides the fact that this does not undermine the presumed Lutheran background of the SRT, such a possibility fails to explain either the choice of different matching terms only for Mt 26:3 – 27:41 and 21:23, or their concentration in the part of the Gospel in which there was the greatest risk of provoking the outrage of the Orthodox religious authorities beyond the Carpathians, as well as the ordinary Orthodox clergy and the faithful in Transylvania. The original ecclesiastical titles (cf. the Psl. митрополитъ mitropolit”, пископъ piskup” and владыка vladika) were also so similar to the respective Romanised forms and so deeply rooted in the Orthodox Slavonic tradition that anyone slightly familiar with it and the Slavonic language could have hardly failed to acknowledge their meaning. Mitropolit, piscop/piscop and vladica were, in Old Romanian, not acclimated Slavonic terms on a par with arhiereu, from which they differed both because of a presumably more common use and because they corresponded more precisely to the Orthodox ecclesiastical hierarchy.⁹

All these translations for 'high priest' find no correspondence in either the parallel Slavonic text or in the older Church Slavonic tradition of Matthew's Gospel, which was unerringly faithful to the Greek text (cf. NTG-NA₂₈, GNT-UBS₅ and EMCT).

Like the Greek tradition, the Old Church Slavonic tradition presents, in the aforementioned verses of Matthew, just one translation for 'high priest' (cf. архидиаконъ = ἀρχιερεύς).¹⁰ But the Greek and Church Slavonic traditions are not the only case: the Latin Vulgate (cf. princeps sacerdotum in BSV-WG₅) and the pre- and post-Lutheran German versions (cf. Fürst den Priester in MB [1466], Hohepriester in ST [1522] and LB [1541], ZFB [1531], EB [1537] and DB [1540]) also follow the same translation approach.

The same is also true for other traditions that may have influenced the Romanian text of the SRT, such as the Hussite and pre-Hussite Czech tradition (cf. kniežec pop/ově)

II A₁; 26:65 I D₁, II A₁; 27:1 I C₂, II A₂; 27:3 I C₂, II Ø; 27:6 I C₂, II A₂; 27:20 I C₂, II A₂; 27:41 I C₂, II A₂ (III Ø).

⁹ Apart from митрополитъ mitropolit – which entered the Romanian language unchanged –, all these slavonisms were already acclimated by the late 15th century: the Slavo-Romanian documents attest пископъ(piscop) from 1464, владыка vladica from 1469 and архидиаконъ arhiereu from 1500 (see DERS: 177, 264 and DLRV: 72; for митрополитъ [1488, tr. 1784], cf. Tiktin²: 722 and DRHA³: 32/53).

¹⁰ In Mt 3:17-27:55, EMCT registers only one exception to архидиаконъ, arhierei, namely старешина жицьческъ starēšina žyc'českъ” (cf. Miklosich: 882, ἀρχιερεύς). This sporadic varia lectio occurs only in 4 out of 14 Aprakos and 2 out of 13 Tetraevangelia and New Testaments, mostly of Eastern Slavonic redaction.

in Dr [c. 1360] and Ol [c. 1416]), and in the Hussite and Lutheran Hungarian tradition (cf. pap[i] sejdelem in HB [1466] and ÚTS [1541]).¹¹

The early Lutheran phase of the Polish tradition is contemporary with the printing of the SRT and has only one translation for ‘high priest’ but it seems to be independent from all the other traditions mentioned so far (both EM [1551] and NTSM [1553] render ‘high priest’ by biskup, which is coherent with the earliest extant translations of the Bible into Polish, cf. Babiaczyk 1906: 84).¹²

It therefore seems clear that the four or five different translations of ‘high priest’ cannot stem from a specific version of the New Testament among those that appeared before roughly the first half of the 16th century and were accessible, at least virtually, to translators and revisers of the SRT.

The hypothesis most consistent with the Lutheran context of Sibiu is that the person who edited the Romanian text of the SRT necessarily based his work on Luther’s text and everyday language. This may be explained by the militant nature of the Lutheran edition and the lack of adequate models for a translation of the Tetraevangelion into Romanian (Luther’s revolutionary ideas on biblical translation are well known).¹³

What is certain is that the Sibian revisers did not even conform to the austere simplicity of Luther: of the various translations of ‘high priest’ contained in the Romanian text of the SRT, only the term preuț (celui/mai) mare (cf. întăiu/mare preot and variants in the CRT) resembles the Lutheran Hohepriester, but the St Petersburg fragment seems to attribute only a marginal or residual role to it (obviously, we cannot know if it was equally marginal or residual in the rest of the supposed Four-Gospels Book printed at Sibiu).

¹¹ Florescu (2010: 50-54, 65-70) argues that the archetype of the Romanian text may also have been translated from Hussite Czech and pre-Lutheran German texts.

¹² The later Polish versions of the Gospel, printed between 1556 and 1599, are quite more various, cf. ksiaże/przełożony kápłáiskie (Szarffenberger’s [1556] and Leopolita’s [1561] NTs); przedniejszy/ksiaże kapłan (Biblia brzeska [1563]); aryofiárownik (Budny’s NT [1570]); przednieszy ofiárownik (Czechowic’s NT [1577]); arykápłan/nanysszy kápłan (Wujk’s NT [1593 and 1599]). Such a lexical variety might reflect a confessional one implying distinct redactional criteria if not the use of distinct sources (Only four out of the nine 16th century Polish versions might be defined “Catholic” [1556, 1561, 1593 and 1599], being the other five rather “Calvinist” [1563], “Socinian” or “Unitarian” [1570, 1577] and, as was just said, “Lutheran” [1551, 1553]). Cf. https://ewangelie.uw.edu.pl/teksty.php?y=1551&g=1&c=26&f= [10.4.2019].

¹³ See how Luther justified the biblical usage of common people’s German in Sendbrief vom Dolmetschen (1530): “man mus die mutter jhm hause, die kinder auff der gassen, den gemeinen man auff dem markt drumb fragen vnd den selbigen auff das maul sehen wie sie reden vnd darnach dolmetzschen” (cf. Sendb.: 637₁₉₋₂₂; for a critical edition and English translation, cf. also: https://editions.mml.ox.ac.uk/editions/sendbrief/ [21.04.2020], for a Romanian translation with a critical commentary, cf. Munteanu-Nastasia 2017: 16-23 [esp. 18]).

The Romanian text of the SRT presents each translation of 'high priest' in a distinct part of the Gospel of Matthew, occasionally alternating between them. There are exceptions such as preuți (cei/mai) mari and vlădici in Mt 21:23, where there seems to be a clear intention on the part of the revisers to depict the Jewish priests as Orthodox prelates (it is only the short passage in ch. 21, in which 'high priest' is translated with the term vlădică and the first chapter of Matthew in which Jesus clashes with religious leaders). Vlădică appears always in the plural and six times out of seven in Mt 27 which gives the high priests a key role in the sentencing of Christ and includes them among those who mock Him on the Cross. Piscup and mitropolit appear in Mt 26, the former three times in the plural and twice in the singular (see Plot to kill Jesus, Judas betrays Jesus and Arrest of Jesus), the latter six times, all in the singular (only in Jesus' trial before the Sanhedrin).

These variants can be traced back to three simple criteria, none of which require a profound knowledge of Romanian and/or Church Slavonic: 1. The difference between singular and plural which seems to allude to the difference between the clergy and their chief priest; 2. The recognisability of the ecclesiastical titles as Orthodox ones; 3. The symbolic importance of each place in Mt which is translated, and therefore its importance in terms of religious propaganda.

What seem to vary, according to the Easter cycle, are the editorial criteria and not, or not just, the translators and sources used (cf. Tasmowski 2009: 334). Of the two clearly distinct redactional layers, one attributable to the translation and the other to the revision carried out at Sibiu, the latter is thought to have introduced the (anti-) Orthodox references that were lacking in the former or were not particularly evident. Indeed, a Lutheran or Hussite translation would surely have had (anti-) Catholic references due to the sources and the context: from Banat to Moldavia, all the regions in which the Romanian text of the SRT may have been translated were located on the edge of the "Latin" world and had been exposed to Catholic propaganda.¹⁴ The main objective of all the religious reformist movements from the west was inevitably the Catholic Church and their propaganda, at least initially, had to be presumably aimed at Romanian Catholics, even in the Carpathian-Danubian area (the Romanian-Cyrillic spelling of the SRT betrays the influence of Latin-Hungarian spelling and/or of Saxon pronunciation, leading to the first Lutheran infiltration of the Latin communities of Banat-Hunedoara or of Moldavia, see Petrovici 1971: 18, Gheție 1979: 84-86).¹⁵ It also means that the base-translation of ‘high priest’ in the Romanian text of SRT – and therefore in its Urtext – is the same as in the CRT, in other words in another edition of the Tetraevangelion which has a clear Lutheran background. It goes without saying that the general term preută (celui/mai) mare should be ascribed to the translation while mitropolit and vlădică are due to the revision carried out at Sibiu. The case of piscup is less obvious: the SRT displays the old Romanian polysemy but also combines uses and possibly influences that do not coincide with those of vlădică.

¹⁴ Documentary evidence indicates that there were three Latin bishoprics in Moldavia, the land from where Filip Maler probably came, between the 13th and 16th centuries: the bishoprics of Milcov or Cumania (1227-1241), Siret (1370-1434 or 1497) and Baia (1418-1523), as well, but only from the early 17th century, as the episcopate of Bacău (1607-1818). During the first few centuries, the bishops of these three Moldavian bishoprics were Polish, Hungarian and Italian, already members of the Franciscan and Dominican orders (see Sabău 1943: 235-242, especially 238, note 4).

With respect to piscup, the old Romanian word vlădică had a more restricted meaning in a confessional sense, but a broader absolute meaning, which made it the perfect equivalent of arbieren, but just more usual and recognisable as Orthodox.

The origins and usage of the two ecclesiastical titles in 16th and 17th century Romanian texts can be summarised as follows:

Vlădică < Ch. Sl. владыка vladyka, see Byz. Gr. δεσπότης (LLP⁵: 195-196, Sophocles: 352): 1. ‘lord, governor’ (cf. NTG-NA₂₈, GNT-UBS₅ ἡγεμών; EMCT владыка, генонъ gemonъ); see SRT: 28^v₅ (Mt 10:18) = in the parallel Slavonic text; CRT: 19^v₃ (51); 2. Honorary title of Orthodox prelates (Scriban: 1416), cf. vlădicie ‘seignury or principality’ but also the rank of bishop or metropolitan (CP: 9^R₈ [227]); Ch. Sl. владычество vladyč'stro (cf. Miklosich: 66; T534: 371/371; 374/373; DRHB⁸: 268/432); 3. ‘prelate, (Orthodox) bishop’ (cf. Popinceanu 1964: 226 and DERS: 264);

Piscup/piscop < Ch. Sl. пископъ cf. Byz. Gr. πίσκοπος and/or Vulg. Lat. piscopu (ESJS¹¹: 646, Mihăescu 1967: 97):¹⁶ 1. ‘bishop (of any confession)’ (CC²: 101, 30 [97], PO: 6^R₄ [10]), cf. the first occurrence of пископъ ‘Armenian bishop’ in Moldo-Slavonic documents (DRHA¹: 14/21 [1401]) and ‘Orthodox bishop’ in Wallacho-Slavonic documents (DRHB⁸: 294/432 [1580]).

The five cases in the Romanian text of the SRT are the oldest known occurrences of piscup, if not in absolute terms, but at least in terms of a Romanian translation of the Scriptures; they are also the only examples of piscup as translation of the term ‘high priest’ in the Gospels, excluding the translation in the Bratu Codex (ca. 1560, ¹⁵ On the attitude of Bohemian and Lutheran reformist movements to the Orthodox authorities, see Panaitescu (1964: 280-281), Binder (1971: ibid.).

¹⁶ The unaccented u < o of piscup is indistinguishable from that of inherited Romanian latinisms (Densusianu 1938: 92), but the hypothesis of a pre-Slavonic, Greek or Latin, etymology has not found many supporters (cf. Ionescu 1994: 29). On the other hand, northern-Greek loanwords in Palaeoslavonic display an analogous vowel closing, e.g.: οὐράρ urar' < ὡράριον ‘stole (liturgical vestment)’, пископъ < πίσκοπος ‘bishop’ (see Фасмер 1906: 451).

CB), which seems to come from the same SRT (cf. piscupii in CB 4414 = SRT 105^v₂₀₋₂₁, [Mt 26:14]).¹⁷

In an old Romanian text such as the SRT, it was inevitable that the use of piscup followed the ecclesiastical use of Slavonic, or rather the curial use or chancery writing with which Filip Maler and his “workshop” (cf. It. bottega) were probably most familiar.¹⁸

Along the border between Slavia orthodoxa and Slavia latina, in Chancery Slavonic were regularly used: 1. пискупъ, in internal documents, for Orthodox bishops and bishops of all denominations; 2. бискупъ biskup” in external documents, solely for Latin bishops (almost always non-residents and foreigners, like their faithful, at least in the Principalities); 3. владыка, both in internal and external documents, solely for Orthodox bishops.

More precisely, the coexistence of three titles may date to the 13th-14th centuries in Serbian and Croatian Slavonic (Skok¹: 157), to the 14th-15th centuries in the case of Lithuanian-Ruthenian and Russian Slavonic (Срезневский¹: 88, ГСБМ²: 8-10 and CCYM¹: 96) and to the 15th-16th centuries for Moldavian Slavonic (*cf. DRHA*²: 84/120 [1454] and DŞM²: 180/448 [1499]). From the same border, this lexical facies is also reflected outside Slavia, in Hungarian chancery (cf. püspök ‘Latin and reformed bishop’, [v]ladika ‘Orthodox bishop’ in EOE¹⁻³: I/4 [1540]; VII/260 [1566]; VII/16 [1577]; Tört¹: I/86 [1564]) and Saxon chancery of Transylvania (cf. the Germ. Bischof/Pischof ‘Latin and Lutheran bishop’, Wladicka ‘Orthodox bishop’ in QGSK⁴: 182 [1556], 498 [1528] and passim; Hurm.¹¹: 96/656 [1582]; MV¹: 149/420 [1600]), but also the Turkic-Tatar chancery of the Crimean Khanate (cf. the Tk. püskub ‘Catholic bishop’, vladiga ‘Orthodox bishop’ in Kolodziejczyk 2011: 20/653 [1520], 34/770 [1592]).¹⁹

¹⁷ The CB is a Slavo-Romanian miscellany, an interlinear text with the two languages printed on alternate lines and containing parts of the Acts of the Apostles and the Gospels, copied in Southern Transylvania and dated by Pop Bratul to 1560 (see Mihăilă 1981: 69, and on the correspondences with SRT, Gheție/ Mares 1985: 342).

¹⁸ Assuming that the title of Magister/Meister, attributed to Filip by the sources, did not imply proficiency in a specific art or craft but higher education, this is unlikely to have included the littera slavonica or rutenicales (cf. Hervay 1965: 124-125). The children of the Saxon elite received – preferably at Krakow, Prague, Vienna or some other German-speaking city – a Catholic or Protestant education, but always a western one (Papacostea 1958: 61).

¹⁹ The form in p- of the German is attested from the 11th century (cf. Piskofes, MhDW¹: s.v.) and it is thought that it might be the origin of the Hungarian word püspök (cf. Rocchi 1987: 50 and Mollay 1992: 112). Both the German term Bischof/Pischof and the Hungarian term püspök may have come into contact with the Psl. пискупъ with which they share the meaning ‘Orthodox bishop’.

The entire form episcop/episcup < Byz. Gr. ἐπίσκοπος cf. Psl. επισκοπή episkup' (Tiktin²: 136, Popinceanu 1964: 154-155) followed Slavonic usage and was the most frequently used term in official titulary and therefore almost always referred to Orthodox bishops (its acclimation is attested in Wallacho-Slavonic documents from 1535, cf. иєпискѹпъ ѹepiscupъ, in DERS: 74 and DRHB³: 194/320).²⁰ However, the aphæretic form appears to have been more sensitive to the variability of the vernacular Romanian and to the influence of other languages.

It was not until the early 18th century – from the Union of the Orthodox Church of Transylvania with Rome – that piscup/piscop took on, popularly, the more restricted meaning of ‘Catholic bishop’, while vlădică and episcop retained the meaning of ‘Orthodox bishop’ (see Popinceanu 1964: 194, “[piscup] mancherorts mundartlich katholischer Bischof, während der orthodoxe vlădică oder heute episcop heißt”).²¹ The first Wallachian documents following the Union use the term piscup to refer to the bishop of Transylvania in the sense of Roman or “united”, i.e. ‘Uniate’ (Stinghe¹: 8/15, 16 [1701]).²² Nonetheless there are examples of Latin piscupi and piscopi in Transylvania or Moldavia, in earlier documents (cf. Şererus piscop and vlădică, piscupii [...] si toţi ai Îpărătului in MV¹: 142/392, 148/412 [1600]; piscopul de la Bacău in SDIR¹⁻²: 7/83 [1685]).

Actually, in earlier sources, the meaning of ‘Latin bishop’ used to come under the general term ‘bishop’ which was supposed to emphasise the reference of piscup/piscop to a coeval and possibly local ecclesiastical hierarchy.

The antiquity and adaptability of piscup/piscop to different confessional milieus are confirmed by the numerous toponyms which stem from these words and which are widespread throughout the Romanian Sprachraum (see Iordan 1963: 236, 241, 360). Sometimes, the link with non-Orthodox and especially Catholic communities does seem probable: 1. Пиڪٽپٽى Piscupești = Пиڪٽپٽىلۆر Piscupeștilor (DRHB^{1;4}: 129/221 [1465]; 279/329 [1549]) is the oldest toponym of the “family”; location: Oltenia, border with Banat (Gorj/Mehedinți), i.e. a region which was particularly exposed to Hungarian Catholic and Serbian Orthodox influence (see Alzati 1981: 160-163); 2. Ръвенник Пиڪٽپۇلۇر Răvenic Piscupulor (DRHB²: 237/462 [1626]), rare; location Oltenia (Vilcea/Argeș), i.e. in the heart of the ancient Latin diocese of Argeș (see Alzati 1981: ibid.); 3. (Горъ) Пиڪٽپ(a) (Gor) Piskop(a) = [Dialul] Piscop[ului] (DIRA XVII⁴: 5/3 [1616], 618/486 [1620]; DRHA²³: 72/88 [1635]); location Moldavia (Iași), near Cotnari, which between 1562 and 1563 was the official residence of a Socinian or Calvinist bishop, and had previously been a colony of Catholic Saxons and Hungarians (see Giurescu 1967: 216).

²⁰ The whole form rarely referred to bishops of different confessions. A Moldo-Slavonic document records the killing of the bishop of Baia in 1522, 19 years after the event took place, solely because it had happened during a visit to the diocese and the voivode had confiscated the property of the deceased за съмртвъ единого епископа латинскаго [on the death of a latin bishop] see DSV: 63/314, 323-325). Episcop/episcup is first attested in a vernacular text in 1560: in the preface to his Romanian Catechism, Coresi stresses that he printed the book кълъщъ епъкъдъи [with the knowledge of] the Orthodox bishop of Hungary = Transylvania (cf. DLR^{1,7}: 634-637 and TR16: 101).

²¹ An opposition which, even by the late 19th century, had become merely a vernacular archaism, cf. Șăineanu: 483 (1887: 245-246), Damé³: 220.

²² Orthodox Transylvanian sources used the masculine vlădic for all the bishops of the Romanians, whether Uniate or not (cf. Stinghe¹: 9/17 [1701] and Laurianu-Massimu: 576). There is little doubt yet that this use of vlădic relied on the more traditional (and older) use of vlădică, since the Romanians of Transylvania had traditionally been Orthodox of Byzantine-Slavonic rite in their large majority.

In the case of the vineyards of Cotnari, in particular, local memory of a Latin bishop seems to be confirmed by the form Dealu Bi<س>cop, which is perhaps the oldest (cf. Dealul Pescop, DRHA^{19;23}: 101/121 [1626]; 77/98 [transl. 1794]). The form in b- – of Polish, Czech or Ruthenian origin – remained restricted to Moldavia where, from the mid-15th century to beyond the mid-18th century (in Romanian vernacular, from the early 17th century), it is recorded sporadically in internal documents and translations, alternating with the form in p- but always with the meaning of ‘Latin bishop’ (see Mitu 1963: 206, Ionescu 1976: 403).²³ It is indicative that the two forms could alternate within the same document, referring both to a Latin bishop and his bishopric (cf. вископ Баковски biskop Bakovski and Пиڪٽپىй ۋ باكوب Piskopii ot Bakov [Bacău] in DRHA²³: 439/449 [1636]).

Moreover, in the Church Slavonic tradition, the form пискоѹпъ appears referring to Latin bishops from the early 13th century, though in Latino-Slavic border sources like the Croatian and Ruthenian ones (*cf. Срезневский*²: 937-938; CCYM²:148; *Даниччи*²: 306).²⁴

It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the use of piscup in the Romanian text of the SRT, despite being based on local Slavonic, was affected by other languages including non-Slavic ones (those spoken and written in the Latin-Reformist milieu of translation and printing, i.e. especially German and Hungarian).

However, not even Slavonic explains the two occurrences of piscup in the singular, where it would be more usual to find mitropolit (104^{v13}, 110^{v9}, cf. Mt 26:14 and 51). Considering that the titles in question are not similar either in Slavonic or in ancient Romanian (cf. LLP^{1;18;25}: 54-55; 217; 39; Tiktin^{1;2}: 133; 136, 722) and that they are clearly distinguished in the text of the SRT, it could be argued that: (a) the individual parts of the Gospel were translated separately, without any attempt at harmo-nisation, and that there was no final revision process, or, alternatively, that (b) a rushed final revision introduced the term mitropolit, where the translation envisaged both for the singular and plural forms of 'high priest' solely the term piscup (and possibly prentă [celă/mai] mare in the rest of the Gospel).

²³ Although, interestingly, a biscop armenescu does appear in Moldavia (Iorga 1927: 72 [1754]).

²⁴ On the controversial origin of the form in b-, *cf. ESJS*¹: 62-63; Rocchi (1990: 167-168). Berneker, instead, doesn't seem to have doubt: “Aus ahd. biskof, mhd. bischof” (SEW¹: 58).

In case (b), the Romanian Urtext of the SRT clearly reflects a context in which the highest ecclesiastical authority was represented by the bishops, more probably Latin bishops, rather than the metropolitan.²⁵ Equally clearly, the context of linguistic influences exerted on the Romanian Urtext must have reflected cultural and confessional influences.

The only translations of 'high priest' genetically and/or semantically similar to the Rum. piscup, and capable of influencing its usage in the SRT, are the Germ. Bischof (MB), the Hung. püspök (HB and ÚTS), and the Cz. and Pol. biskup (Dr, Ol and NTSM). Bischof, püspök and biskup are used, in the respective traditions of the Gospel exactly like piscup in the Romanian text of the SRT, in the singular and the plural, both for the priestly caste and for Caiaphas. However, it should be emphasised that these traditions are mainly faithful to the Latin Vulgate and that the variants of piscup translate the Lat. pontifex in St John's Gospel and hardly ever in the Synoptic Gospels (cf. Mc 15:11, Jn 7:45 and cc. 11, 18, 19 passim).²⁶ The only exception is the Polish Lutheran tradition, with an initial version of the Tetraevangelion printed in around the same period of the SRT, which generally presents biskup for 'high priest' in all the Gospels (see above biskup, in NTSM).

Already well-documented in Latin-Germanic sources (DC-Lat⁶: 408, Diefenbach: 298), the medieval custom of confusing pontifex with episcopus is probably linked to the custom of referring to Caiaphas as a bishop, widespread in Polish, Hungarian and Czech Catholic contexts, as well as German contexts, from the 14th century, through breviaries, passionals (martyrologies) and various collections of evangelical passages for devotional and liturgical reading (cf. Szarvas-Simonyi²: 1345-1346, Gebauer¹: 57 and Urbańczyk^{1,2}: 95).

²⁵ As is known, similar conditions existed in the Banat, Transylvania and in Moldavia, from the 15th century due to the infiltration of the Hussite Reform already before the Lutheran Reform (cf. Alzati 1981: 39-56, 249-264). Cartojan claimed that "the hotbeds of the Hussite Reform weren't yet totally extinguished in Ardeal when, from Germany" – more exactly from Leipzig and Wittenberg, around 1520 –, Saxon merchants and students started to introduce Luther's ideas" (Cartojan 1980 [1940]: 84-85). Not only Transylvania, but Banat, Maramureş, Moldavia too had received Hussitism from Hungary and Poland-Lithuania. Moldavia is likely to have helped spreading it in the Novgorod Rus' (cf. Birnbaum 1973: 249 and De Michelis 1993: 23-24, 25 and 147, on Waldo-Hussitism in Eastern Europe). On the spread of Hussitism in the Romanian countries, cf. Macurek (1927: 53-75), Dan (1944: 84-86), Šmahel (1993: 141, 143-144).

²⁶ "In Matthew there is not a single deviation from princeps sacerdotum" (Nestle 1907: 501-502).

It is unlikely that this use of piscup as an alternative to mitropolit, in the Romanian text of the SRT, stems from an Orthodox translation context, unless by mistake, and it can be excluded that it derives from the direct tradition of the Palaeoslavonic Tetraevangelion (although cf. бискупъ for the Latin word pontifex in Croatian hagiographies and lectionaries, LLP³: 90).²⁷ Vice versa, it is likely that the two cases of piscup = Caiaphas may have eluded those who carried out the revision prior to printing and introduced the Orthodox distinction between bishops and metropolitan. Only as a result of the existence of an older redactional layer is it possible to admit the interference of Caiaphas = episcopus/pontifex, which derives from the languages of the “Latin” tradition (Hungarian, German, Czech or Polish), either directly or through Salvonic.²⁸ This connecting role between the vernaculars of the Banat-Transylvanian and Moldavian area was effectively carried out, in the 15th and 16th centuries, by Transylvanian, Moldavian and Lithuanian-Ruthenian Slavonic (see Olteanu 1958: 77, 79, Macurek 1968: 14-19).²⁹

4. Conclusions

The translation of ‘high priest’ suggests certain final considerations about the Romanian text of the SRT and its sources which need to be summarised: 1. the hyper-translation of ‘high priest’ in the Romanian text of SRT cannot be explained either in the light of the Church Slavonic tradition of the Gospel of Matthew or in the German Lutheran tradition; 2. no other translation of Matthew, among those considered in this study, comes as close to reproducing an entire ecclesiastical

²⁷ The earliest Old Church Slavonic tradition of the Gospels of Mark and John usually uses архиереи, with a few variations which do not relate just to the Gospel of John: жрециъ ѣр’, старѣйшина жрециескъ starѣjšina žr’c’sk” [rare жидовескъ/иуденескъ židov’sk” or иудеискъ”], священне свѣтиене [LLP³⁶: 46 = ordo sacerdotalis], кѣнаазъ knenž” (cf. Mar and Zogr for Mc, EIOT for Jn).

²⁸ The translation of “pharisee” with the term dubovnic in the Romanian text of the SRT seems to belong to the same redactional layer and the same Latin influences mediated by Church Slavonic, cf.: Ch. Sl. дѹховникъ dubov’nik” ‘confessor’ but also ‘cleric, priest’ (Miklosich: 182, Даничић¹: 318-319); Cz. duchownik and Pol. duchownych ‘pharisee’ and ‘cleric, priest (esp. Catholic priest)’ (Gebauer¹: 856, Urbańczyk²⁹: 219 and Skok 1927: 189). We should infer that farisei must have seemed less appropriate and/or usual than dubovnic (cf. DLR²²: 63 and Popinceanu 1964: 157). In the Romanian text of the SRT, dubovnic was used 21 times, and farisei 8 times, though the latter was a more literal translation of the Ch. Sl. Фарисеи and the Germ. Pharisäer (cf. EMCT and LB). It is hardly surprising that it occurs regularly in the CRT and in the coresian corpus (cf. Densusianu 1938: 145, 439 and passim). Florescu recalls that in the Poučenija [Teachings] of Neagoe Basarab (c. 1520), дѹховникы dubovniky “renvoie généralement aux moines vivant dans le monastère” (2010: 60-61).

²⁹ Cf. also Panaitescu (1965: 18-19), on the secular and spoken use of Slavonic.

hierarchy, to which it is worth adding duhovnici as the translation of pharisees i.e. ‘clerics’ but also ‘separate’ (Hung. levált in HB [cf. L. (a sacerculo) disiuncti = fig. monks?])³⁰; 3. without exception, the titles employed belong to the Orthodox Slavic tradition and entered the Romanian language from Church Slavonic, even though only some of them can be considered to be strictly Orthodox (cf. preuť and piscup vs. vlădică and mitropolit); 4. the (residual?) cases of piscup = Caiaphas reflect a change in the redactional criteria and objectives (and therefore, probably, in the print/edition milieu) and confirm the old hypothesis of Latin and Latin-Protestant influence; 5. it is possible that the comparison with the CRT shows a gradual institutionalisation of Lutheran Reform in the same Transylvanian area (although it cannot be excluded that the SRT reused a Romanian proto-translation from the Czech, Hungarian or Polish, which can be ascribed to the Bohemian Reformation, cf. Florescu’s [2010: 65-70] hypothesis).

Whatever the case, the hyper-translation of ‘high priest’ in the Romanian text of SRT shows how profound and vivid the imprint of Slavonism on Romanian civilization must have appeared – even from the West, around the half of the 16th century –, albeit the long Slavo-Romanian Middle Ages was undoubtedly nearing its end.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Biblical and Documentary Sources³¹

CB = Alexandru Gafton (ed.), Codicele Bratul, Iași: Editura Universității “Alexandru Ion Cuza”, 2003, <http://media.lit.uaiic.ro/gafton/txt/text> [05.04.2019].

CC² = Sextil Pușcariu, Alexe Procopovici (ed.), Carte cu Învățătură (1581), vol. I, Textu, București: Socec & Co., 1914.

CP = Gheorghe Chivu (ed.), Pravila lui Coresi, in Ion Gheție (coord.), Texte românești din secolul al XVI-lea, București: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1982, 129-245.

CRT = Florica Dimitrescu (ed.), Tetraevanghelul tipărit de Coresi (Brașov 1560-1561), comparat cu Evangeliarul lui Radu de la Mănești (1574), București: Editura Academiei R.P.R., 1963.

CST = Tetraevangel slavonesc al lui Coresi, Brașov, 1562 (B.A.R. III 234272).

DB = Biblia, beider Allt vnnd Newen Testamenten [...] gespürt vnd gesehen durch D. Johann Dietenberger, zum anderernmäll Corrigeret vnd verbessert in synem Leben, Anno MDXL, Augstmaent.

DIRA = Documente privind istoria României. A. Moldova, veacul XVII, vols. I-V (1601-1625), București: Editura Academiei R.P.R., 1952-1957.

³⁰ It could be a criticism of “secluded” observant monks from reformist urban environments (cf. Mareș 1967: 72). The Franciscans played an important role both in disseminating the Lutheran Reform in Transylvania and Banat and in combating it, see Köpeczi (1992: 280-281). With regard to Lutheran criticism of monastic life as a separate and therefore privileged path to salvation, see Bainton (1952: esp. 51).

³¹ For the Greek and Latin text of New Testament, see <https://www.academic-bible.com/en/online-bibles/about-the-online-bibles> [26.09.2016].

Dr = Vladimír Kyas (vyd.), Staročeská Bible Drážďanská a Olomoucká, vol. I, Evangelia, Praha: Akademia, 1981.

DRHA-B = Documenta Romaniae Historica. Seria A. Moldova/B. Țara Românească, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R. [subsequently: Academiei Române], 1965-2014/1965-2013.

DŞM = Ioan Bogdan (ed.), Documentele lui Ștefan cel Mare, vols. I-II, Bucureşti: Socec & Co., 1913.

DŞV = Mihai Costăchescu (ed.), Documentele moldovenesti de la Ștefăniță Voievod (1517-1527), Iași: Bravo, 1943.

EB = Bibel Alt und New Testament: nach dem Text in der heiligen Kirchen gebraucht, durch doctor Johann Ecken [...] Mit Römi. König. Mai. Gnad vnd Freihait, MDXXXVII.

ЕИоСТ = Анатолий А. Алексеев, Анна А. Пичхадзе, и др. (изд. подг.), Евангелие от Иоанна в славянской традиции, С.-Петербург: РБО, 1998.

EM = Izabela Winiarska-Górska (ed.), Ewangelia według św. Mateusza, przekład Stanisława Murzynowskiego, Królewiec, 1551, <http://www.evangelie.uw.edu.pl/teksty.php?y=1551> [10.04.2019].

EMCT = Анатолий А. Алексеев, Анна А. Пичхадзе и др. (изд. подг.), Евангелие от Матфея в славянской традиции, С.-Петербург: РГНФ, 2005.

EOE = Sándor Szilágyi (szer.), Erdélyi Országgyűlési Emlékek, vols. I-III (1540-1596), Budapest: Akadémia Könyvkladó Hivatala, 1875-1877.

HB = Décsi Gyula (olv.), Szabó T. Ádám (kiad.), A Münchener Kódex (1466). A négy Evangélium szövege és szótára, Békéscsaba: Európa Könyvkiadó, 1985.

Hurm. = Eudoxiu de Hurmuzaki, Nicolae Iorga, Documente privitive la istoria românilor, vol. XI (1517-1612), Bucuresci: [s.e.], 1900.

Iorga 1927 = Nicolae Iorga, "Patru documente botoșăneni", in Revista istorică XIII/ 1-4, 71-74.

Kolodziejczyk 2011 = Kolodziejczyk, Dariusz, The Crimean Khanate and Poland-Lithuania. International Diplomacy on the European Periphery (15th-18th C.). A Study of Peace Treaties Followed by Annotated Documents, Leiden-Boston: Brill, 2011.

LB = Biblia: das ist die gantze Heilige Schrifft Deudsche auff New zugericht, D. Mart. Luth. [...], Gedrückt zu Wittemberg, Durch Hans Lufft, MDXLI.

LRT = Moses Gaster (ed.), "La versione rumena del Vangelo di Matteo tratta dal Tetraevangelion del 1574 (ms. del Museo britannico: Harley 3611^b) e pubblicata per la prima volta", in Archivio Glottologico Italiano XII, 1890-1892, 197-254.

MB = William Kurrelmeyer (hrsg), [Die Mentelin Bibel] Die erste deutsche Bibel, I Bd. Evangelien, Tübingen: Gedruckt für den Literarischen Verein in Stuttgart, 1924.

Munteanu-Nastasia 2017 = Eugen Munteanu, Mariana Nastasia, "Martin Luther, Scrisoare deschisă despre traducere. Versiune românească de E. Munteanu și M. Nastasia", in Transilvania 3, 2017, 14-24.

MV = Mihai Viteazul în conștiința europeană, vol. I, Documente externe, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1982.

NTSM = Izabela Winiarska-Górska (ed.), Nowy Testament zupełny, tzw. Jana Seklucjana, przekład Stanisława Murzynowskiego, Królewiec, 1553, <http://www.evangelie.uw.edu.pl/teksty.php?y=1553> [10.04.2019].

Ol = see above Dr.

PG = Patrologia Cursus Completus, Series Graeca Posterior, Theophilacti Bulgariæ Archiepiscopi, Opera quæ reperiri potuerunt omnia, t. I, Lutetia Parisorum: Exc. J.-P. Migne, 1864.

PO = Viorica Pamfil (ed.), Palia de la Orăştie (1581-1582), Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1968.

QGSK = Quellen zur Geschichte der Stadt Brassó, IV Bd., Brassó: Gușt, 1903.

SDIR = Nicolae Iorga, Studii și documente privind istoria românilor, vols. I-II, Bucureşti: Editura Ministeriului de Instrucție, 1901.

Sendb. = Martin Luthers Werke. Kritische Gesamtausgabe, 30. Bd., 2. Abt., Weimar: Hermann Böhlaus, 1909, 627-646.

SRT = Evangeliarul Slavo-Român de la Sibiu (1551-1553), studiu introductiv filologic de Emil Petrovici, studiu introductiv istoric de Lajos Demény, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1971.

STS = Tetraevanghelul slavonesc de la Sibiu, 1546 (B.A.R. II 630838).

ST = Die Septemberbibel: Das Neue Testament deutsch von Martin Luther, Berlin: Grote, 1883.

Stinghe = Sterie Stinghe, Documente privitoare la trecutul românilor din Șchei (1700-1783), vol. I, Brașov: Ciurcu & Co., 1901.

T534 = Grigore Tocilescu (îngr.), 534 documente slavo-române din Țara Românească și Moldova privitoare la legăturile cu Ardealul 1346-1603, Bucureşti: Cartea Românească, 1931.

TörtT = Történelmi Tár, 3. sorozat 19. kötet, 1896-diki Évfolyam.

TR16 = Ion Gheție (coord.), Texte românești din secolul al XVI-lea, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1982.

Trg = Hans Miklas et al. (hrsgg.), Das Tetraevangelium des Makarie aus dem Jahre 1512. Der 1^{te} kirchen Slavische Evangelien Druck. Faksimile-Ausgabe, Paderborn-München-Wien-Zürich: F. Schöningh Vrlg., 1999.

ÚTS = Sylvester János Új Testamentum. Újsziget 1541, A kísérő tanulmányt írta és a fakszimile szövegét gondozta: Varjas Béla, Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó, 1960.

ZFB = Die ganze Bibel der ursprünglichen ebraischen und griechischen [...], Getruckt zuo Zürich, bey Christoffel Froschouer, MDXXXI [Die Zwingli-Froschauer Bibel].

B. Lexica and Dictionaries

Babiacyk = Babiacyk Adam, Lexikon zur altpolnischen Bibel 1455 (Sophienbibel, Ausgabe von Małek), Breslau: Fleischmann, 1906.

Damé = Fr. Damé, Nouveau dictionnaire roumain-français, vols. I-IV, Bucarest: Imprimerie de l'Etat, 1893-1895.

Даничић = Ђура Даничић, Речник на Књивених Старина Српских, vols. I-III, Биограду, Аржавној Штампарији, 1863-1864.

DC-Lat = Charles du Cange, Glossarium Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis, vols. I-VIII, Niort: Favre, 1883-1887.

DERS = Gheorghe Bolocan, Dicționarul elementelor românești din documentele slavoromâne, 1374-1600, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 1981.

Diefenbach = Lorenz Diefenbach, Novum latino-germanicum mediae et infimae Aetatis, Frankfurt A. M.: J. D. Sauerländer's, 1867.

DLR = Dicționarul limbii române, [s.n.], vols. I-XIX, Bucureşti: Editura Academiei Române R.S.R. [subsequently Editura Academiei Române], 1965-2000.

DLRV = Gheorghe Mihăilă, Dicționarul limbii române vechi. Sfîrșitul sec. X – începutul sec. XVI, București: Editura Enciclopedică Română, 1974.

ESJS = Etymologický Slovník Jazyka Staroslovénského, vols. 1-17, Praha: Akademia, 1989-2010.

Gebauer = Jan Gebauer, Slovník Staročeský, vol. I, v Praze: Unie, 1903.

ГСБМ = Гісторычны Слоўнік Беларускай Мовы, vols. 1-20, Менск: Навука і Тэхніка [subsequently: Беларуская Навука], 1982-2002.

Laurianu-Massimu = August Tr. Laurianu, Joan C. Massimu, Glossariu care coprinde vorbele din limbă romana straine prin originea sau formă loru cumu si celle de origine indoniosă, Bucuresci: Noua Typographia a Laboratorilor Romani, 1871.

LLP = Lexicon Linguae Palaeoslovenicae. Slovník Jazyka Staroslovénskeho, vols. 1-52, Praha: Nakladatelství Československé Akademie Věd Praha, 1958-1992, Nakladatelství Akademie Věd České Republiky, 1995-1997.

MhDW = Georg F. Benecke, Wilhelm K. Müller, Friedrich K. Zarncke, Mittelhochdeutsches Wörterbuch, Lepizig: Hirzel, 1854-1863, http://woerterbuchnetz.de/cgi-bin/WBNetz/wbgui_py?sigle=BMZ&mainmode [03.04.2019].

Miklosich = Franc Miklosich, Lexicon Linguae Palaeoslovenico-Graeco-Latinum. Emendatum Auctum. Vindobonae: Braumueller, 1862-65.

Scriban = August Scriban, Dicționarul limbii românești, Iași: Presa Bună, 1939.

Şăineanu = Lazar Șăineanu, Dicționarul universal al limbii române, Craiova: Scrisul Românesc, 1929 [1896].

SEW = Erich Berneker, Slavisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch, Bde 1-2, Heidelberg: Carl Winter's, 1924.

Skok = Petar Skok, Etimologiski Rječnik Hrvatskoga ili Srpskoga Jezika, vols. I-III, Zagreb, JAZU, 1971-1973.

Sophocles = Evangelinos A. Sophocles, Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods (from B.C. 146 to A.D. 1100), New York-Hildesheim: G. Olms Verlag, 1975 [1914].

Срезневский = Измайл И. Срезневский, Материалы для Словаря древне-русского языка по письменным памятникам, Т. I-III, С.-Петербургъ: Типография Императорской Академии Наукъ, 1893-1912.

ССУМ = Словник Староукраїнської Мови XIV-XV ст., т. 1-2, Київ: Наукова Лумка, 1971-1978.

Szarvas-Simonyi = Gábor Szarvas, Zsigmond Simonyi, Lexicon Lingua Hungarica Aeri Antiquioris, vols. I-II, Budapest: Kladja Hornyánszky Viktor Akadémiai Könyvkereskedése, 1890-1911.

Tiktin = Hariton Tiktin, Rumänisch-Deutsches Wörterbuch, Bde 1-3, Cluj-Napoca: Editura Clusium, 2000-2005 [1895-1925].

Urbańczyk = Stanisław Urbańczyk, Słownik Staropolski, vols. 1-11, Warszawa [subsequently Kraków]: Polska Akademia Nauk, 1953-2002.

C. Secondary Literature

Alzati, Cesare, 1981, Terra romena tra Oriente e Occidente. Chiese ed etnie nel tardo '500, Milano: Jaca Book.

Alzati, Cesare, 2010, “Tradizione culturale slava, appartenenza confessionale e identità culturale tra i Romeni transilvani nella seconda metà del '500”, in Slavica Ambrosiana 1, 181-193.

Bainton, Roland H., 1952, The Reformation of the 16th Century, Boston: Beacon Press.

Binder, Pavel, 1971, “Începuturile Reformei din Transilvania și România din Hunedoara”, in Limba română 20/ 3, 273-276.

Binder, Pavel/ Huttmann, Arnold, 1968, “Contribuții la biografia lui Filip Moldoveanul, primul tipograf român. Evoluția vieții culturale românești la Sibiu în epoca umanistă”, in Limba și literatură 16, 145-174.

Birnbaum, Henrik, 1973, “On Some Evidence of Jewish Life and Anti-Jewish Sentiments in Medieval Russia”, in Viator 4, 225-255.

Bodogac, Teodor, 1972, “Și totuși prima carte romanească s-a tipărit la Sibiu. Considerații despre Evangeliarul slavo-român din 1551-1553”, in Mitropolia Ardealului 17/ 1-2, 82-89.

Bogdan, Ioan, 1891, “O Evanghelie slavonă cu traducere română din secolul al XVI-lea”, in Convorbiri literare 25/ 1, 33-40.

Cartojan, Nicolae, 1980 [1940-1945], Istoria literaturii române vechi, București: Editura Minerva.

Dan, Mihail P., 1944, Cehi, Slovaci și români în veacurile XIII-XVI, Sibiu: Progresul.

Deletant, Dennis, 1975, “A Survey of Rumanian Presses and Printing in the 16th Century”, in The Slavonic and East European Review 53/ 131, 161-174.

Demény, Lajos, 1971, “Evangeliarul slavo-român de la Sibiu – Prima tipăritură în limba română cunoscută pînă azi”, in SRT, 22-98.

Demény, Lajos, 1973, “Cartea și tiparul. Promotorii ai legăturilor culturale dintre țările române în secolul al XVI-lea”, in Studii și materiale de istorie medie 6, 91-109.

Demény, Lajos, 1986, “Filigranele Evangeliarului slavo-român de la Sibiu”, in Lajos Demény, Lidia A. Demény, Carte, tipar și societate la Români în secolul al XVI-lea, București: Editura Kriterion, 294-306.

Demény, Lajos/ Simonescu, Dan, 1965, “Un capitol important din vechea cultură românească (Tetraevangeliu, Sibiu 1546)”, in Studii și cercetări de documentare și bibliologie, Supl. la nr. 1, 1-18.

De Michelis, Cesare, 1993, La Valdesia di Norgorod, Torino: Claudiana.

Densusianu, Ovid, 1938, Histoire de la Langue Roumaine, vol. II, Le seizième siècle, Paris, Librairie Ernest Leroux.

Фасмер, Макс Ю., 1906, “Несколько новыхъ трудовъ по лингвистикѣ”, in Византийский Временник 13/ 2, 450-469.

Florescu, Ioan-Florin, 2010, “Le Tetraévangile de Sibiu (1551-1553). Nouvelles informations sur les sources de la première traduction en roumain des Evangiles”, in Biblicum Jasyense. Romanian Journal for Biblical Philology and Hermeneutics 1, 48-89.

Gheție, Ion, 1966, “Considerații filologice asupra Evangeliarului din Petersburg”, in Studii și cercetări de lingvistică 17/ 1, 47-79.

Gheție, Ion, 1974, Textele rotacizante și originile scrisului literar românesc. Cărțiuni de metodă, in Începuturile scrisului în limba română, București: Editura Academiei R.S.R., 44-97.

Gheție, Ion, 1979, “Evangeliarul slavo-român de la Sibiu și textele românești cu litere latine și ortografie maghiară”, in Limba română 28/ 2, 165-172.

Gheție, Ion/ Mareș, Alexandru, 1985, Originile scrisului în limba română, București: Editura Științifică și Enciclopedică, 336-357.

Giurescu, Constantin C., 1967, Târguri sau orașe și cetăți moldovene din secolul al X-lea pînă la mijlocul secolului al XVI-lea, București: Editura Academiei R.S.R.

Hervay, Ferenc, 1965, "L'imprimerie du maître Philippe de Nagyszeben et les premiers livres en langue roumaine", in Magyar Könyvszemle 81 / 2 sz., 119-127.

Ionescu, Anca Irina, 1976, "Contribution à l'étude du lexique employé dans les traductions roumaines du «Synopsis de Kiev»", in Revue roumaine de linguistique 21 / 3, 401-408.

Ionescu, Ion, 1994, "Doi termeni paleocreștini din epoca daco-română", in Limba română 43 / 1-2, 28-31.

Iordan, Iorgu, 1963, Toponimia românească, București: Editura Academiei R.P.R.

Jakó, Zsigmond, 1977, "Tiparul cu literele latine din Sibiu în secolul al XVI-lea", in Philobiblon Transilvan, București: Editura Kriterion, 93-116.

Köpeczi 1992: Köpeczi, Béla, 1992, Histoire de la Transylvanie, Budapest: Akadémiai Kiadó.

Macůrek, Josef, 1927, "Husitství v rumunských zemích", in Časopis Matice Moravské 51, 1-98.

Macůrek, Josef, 1968, "A influențat actul ceh de cancelarie documentele moldovenești în a doua jumătate a secolului al XV-lea?", in Studii. Revistă de istorie 21 / 1, 3-20.

Mareș, Alexandru, 1967, "Observații cu privire la Evangheliarul din Petersburg", in Limba română 16 / 1, 65-75.

Mareș, Alexandru, 1968, "Evangheliarul din Petersburg, tipărirea unei mai vechi traduceri moldovenești", in Limba română 17 / 1, 85-87.

Mareș, Alexandru, 1990, "Citeva observații asupra Tetraevangelului slavo-român de la Sibiu", in Limba română 39 / 3, 235-242.

Mareș, Alexandru, 2005, "Originalele primelor traduceri românești ale Tetraevangelului și Psalmilor", in Scriere și cultură românească veche, București: Editura Academiei, 259-281; in Ion Gheție (coord.), Cele mai vechi texte românești. Contribuții filologice și lingvistice, București: Universitatea din București, 1982, 183-205.

Mârza, Eva, 1978, "Un fragment din Evangheliarul slavo-român de la Sibiu (1551-1553)", in Limba română 27 / 2, 173-175; in Explorări bibliografice, Sibiu: Techno-Media, 2008, 14-16.

Mihăescu, Haralambie, 1967, Înfluența grecească asupra limbii române pînă în secolul al XV-lea, București: Editura Enciclopedică.

Mihăescu, Haralambie, 1993, La Romanité dans le Sud-Est de l'Europe, Bucharest: Editura Academiei Române.

Mihăilă, Gheorghe, 1972, "Textele bilingve slavo-române și unele aspecte ale studiului calcului lingvistic", in Contribuții la istoria culturii și literaturii române vechi, București: Editura Minerva, 231-249.

Mihăilă, Gheorghe, 1981, "Primul manuscris românesc pre-coresian datat: Codicele Popii Bratul din Brașov (1559-1560) și sursele sale", in Studii de lingvistică și filologie, Timișoara: Facla, 59-114.

Mitu, Mihai, 1963, "Termeni de origine polonă în documentele slavo-moldovenești. I. 1388-1517", in Romanoslavica 8, 155-224.

Mollay, Karl, 1992, "Die deutsch-ungarischen Sprachkontakte", in Honti, László et al. (hrsgg.), Finnisch-Ugrischen Sprachen zwischen dem germanischen und dem slavischen Sprachraum, Amsterdam – Atlanta: Rodopi, 111-116.

Nestle, E., 1907, "The Gospels in the Latin Vulgate", in The American Journal of Theology 11 / 3, 501-502.

